

Reds get legal okay in Spain

From News Wires
Madrid — Spain, in another major reversal of its right-wing policies, legalized the Communist party Saturday for the first time since the end of the Spanish civil war in 1939.

The government's legal journal published the decree and officials said the party was registered in the Interior Ministry's book of political associations.

The Spanish Supreme Court refused last week to rule on the party's legality and sent the issue back to the government of Premier Adolfo Suarez.

Carrillo happy

Santiago Carrillo, the 62-year-old general-secretary of the Spanish Communist party, was questioned by reporters in Paris and he told the Spanish news agency Europa Press that legalization "was an act which grants credibility and strength to the process toward democracy."

"The news gives me the same satisfaction that millions of workers and democrats are going to feel," he said.

Carrillo was jailed briefly last December when he entered Spain after 37 years of exile in France. Communist sources said he was now in Paris to visit a brother who is ill.

The Italian Communist party sent a telegram of congratulations to their Spanish comrades Saturday, calling the legalization "an important step on the road to Spain's full return to democracy."

Basque rally

In the northern industrial town of Vitoria, thousands of Basque nationalists converged for a Basque national day rally today. The government has banned the gathering and said police would block any demonstrations.

Reports from San Sebastian, the capital city of the Basque province of Guipuzcoa, said about 200 persons had staged hunger strikes, demanding amnesty for all political prisoners.

The government legalized more than 120 political parties last year but referred the applications of the Communists and seven other parties to the Supreme Court for a decision. The move was seen as an attempt to avoid any right-wing backlash by making the legalization of the Communists a judicial question rather than a political one.

Opposition parties warned they would boycott national elections scheduled for June if the Communists were not allowed to participate.

The Communists, believed to have the support of about 8% of the electorate, vowed to organize street demonstrations if they were kept off the ballot.

Court ruling asked

Suarez had asked the court to rule on the party's legality in an apparent bid to avoid provoking rightist supporters of the late dictator, Gen. Francisco Franco.

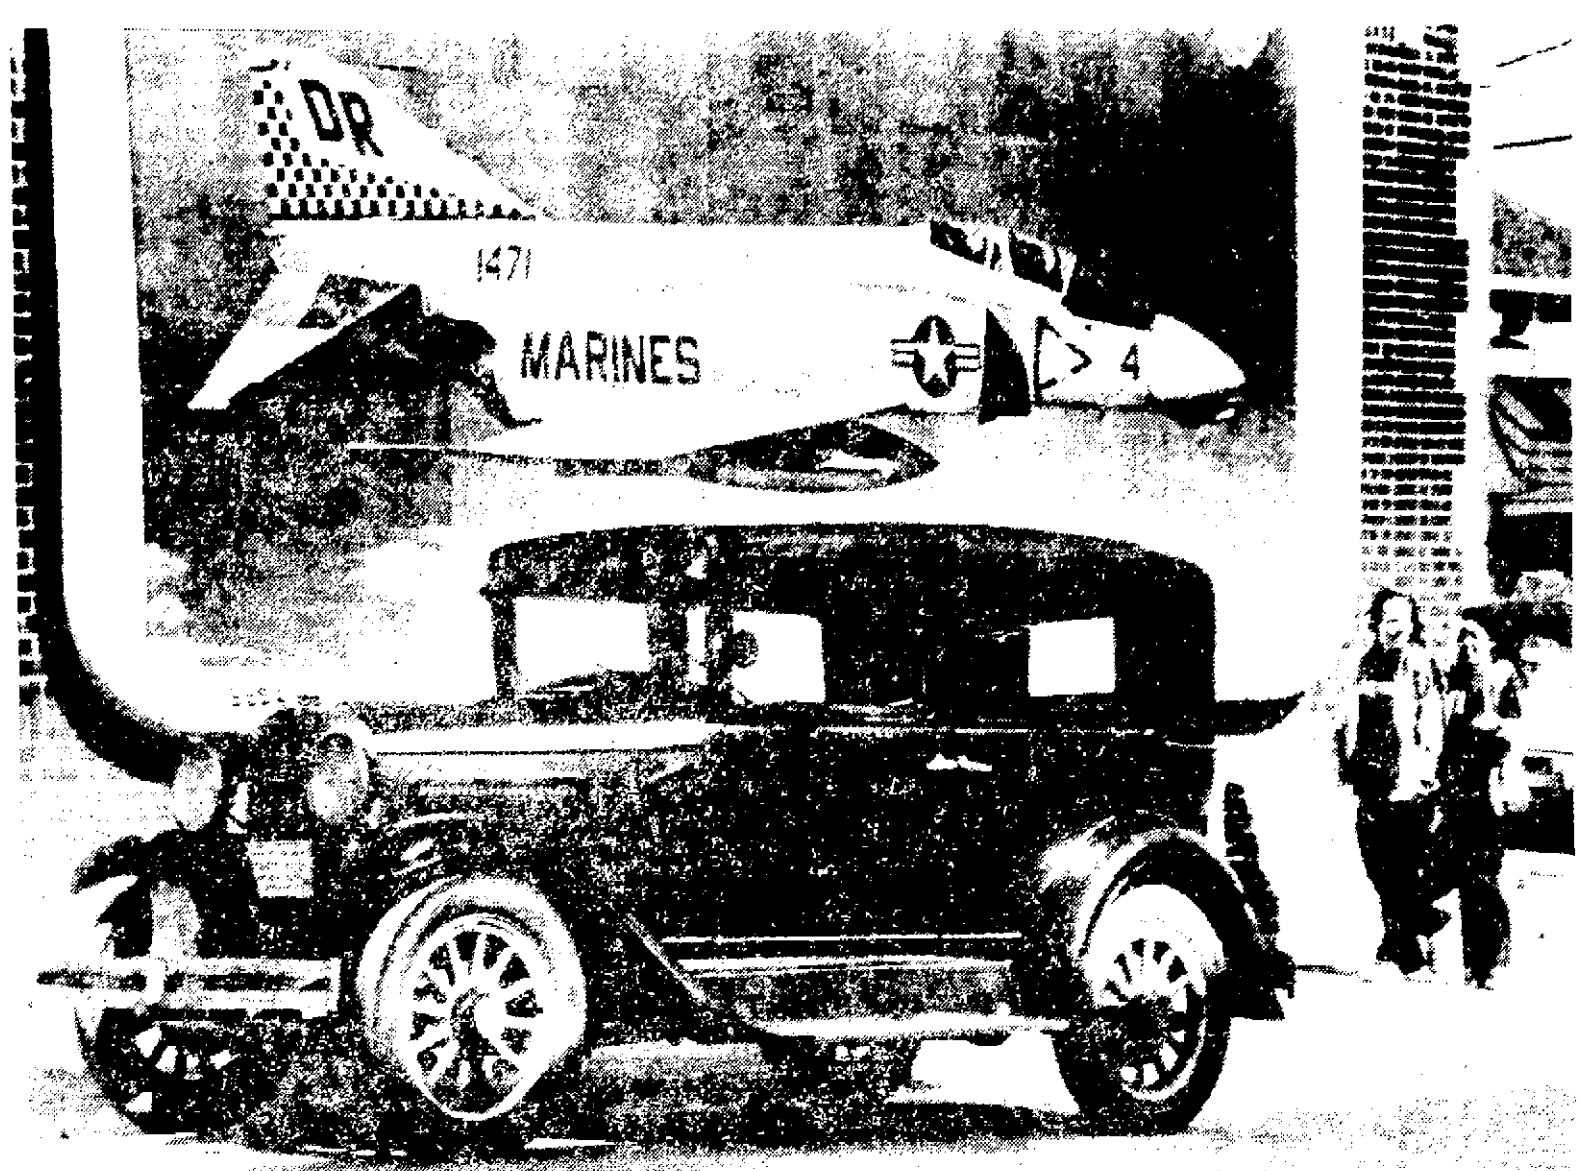

Franco, who led a revolution that toppled the Spanish Republic, banned all political parties except the right-wing Movement during his long tenure that ended with his death in November 1975.

Franco's successor, King Juan Carlos, has promised to lead the country to democracy and has announced a number of liberal reforms, including the first free elections in Spain in 41 years.

Suarez said in a recent interview he found the declared platform of the Communist party "acceptable" with regard to legalization.

"I do not think Premier Suarez is a friend of the Communists," Carrillo said. "I consider him an anticommunist, but an intelligent anticommunist who has understood that ideas are not destroyed with reprisals or illegalities."

"The legalization of the Communist party is an important step in the road to effective democratization of the country," economist Ramon Tamames said. Tamames, a member of the party's executive committee, said he had reason to believe that the other left-wing parties with applications pending for legalization might be recognized soon.

Contract approval pads steelworkers' pockets

From News Wires
Washington — Despite opposition that embarrassed retiring President I. W. Abel, the United Steelworkers Union Saturday accepted a new contract with big 10 steelmakers that will put an estimated 30% more in workers' pockets over the next three years.

Abel said the contract, ratified by a 2 to 1 majority vote of local union presidents, would bring the industry's 340,000 union workers closer to their goal of lifetime job security. It improves security by Aug. 1 for workers with 20 years service or more.

Negotiated under a no-strike agreement, the pact provides an estimated $1.10 hourly wage increase over three years, plus cost-of-living increments. A union expert estimated the pocketbook value of the increases at 10% per year.

Rank-and-file ratification of the pact is not required under the steelworkers' union procedures.

The agreement, which appeared to be equal to a 34% total package gain made by auto workers, will set a pattern for subsequent union talks in the copper, aluminum and can industries.

Higher steel prices?

Asked if it would mean higher steel prices, chief industry negotiator J. Bruce Johnston of U.S. Steel Corp. replied, "Prices must cover costs."

The present contract, which expires Aug. 1, provides steelworkers with about $9 an hour, including overtime. But median pay without extras is closer to $5.50 an hour.

In a stunning rebuff to Abel at the end of his 12-year reign, local union presidents initially rejected the contract by a four-vote margin. The opposition was led by Ed Sadlowski, who ran unsuccessfully to replace Abel.

But the outcome was reversed in a subsequent 193-98 roll call vote.

A subdued Abel indicated he influenced the switch by warning that rejection automatically would place all unresolved issues in arbitration, a system provided in the no-strike agreement.

Anthony Tomko of McKeesport, Pa., a Sadlowski supporter, charged that Abel "railroaded" the agreement through.

"They (McBride's supporters) lost their prestige, that's all we were looking for," he said.

President-elect Lloyd McBride described it as a "good contract" that will give steel mill janitors more than $12,000 a year in 1977. But the opposition showed an internal union split was not mended by McBride's victory.

Security package

The immediate security package for workers with 20 years on the job provided layoff pay up to two years and a $300-a-month supplement for those who take their pension upon layoff prior to the age of 62, when they also would get Social Security.

A special labor-management committee was established to "determine how best to travel the remaining steps to our ultimate objective of a full-time job at full-time pay for every career steelworker."

Other provisions include:

- Twice-a-year wage increments over the next three years amounting to 40 cents an hour in the first year, and 20 cents an hour in each of the next two years, plus incentives and cost-of-living increases.

- A pension increase of $2.50 a month for every year spent in the mill.
- An increase in layoff pay up to $170 a week for one year, and a 20% increase in the employers' contribution to the layoff fund.
- Extension of the no-strike agreement through the 1980 negotiations, which provides a $150 bonus to every worker upon settlement and guarantees economic improvements of no less than 26% over the contract life.

An increase in pay for those on short work weeks and the addition of eye care to the existing medical and dental plan. Also, the contract provides that drug abuse will be handled as "a treatable condition," the same as alcoholism.

The contract did not fully resolve one key union demand, which was to restrict the amount of work the companies could contract to nonunion members. A special committee was established to pursue the matter.

3 killed in bank robbery

Kodak, Tenn. (AP) — Two bank employees and a customer were shot to death and a third employee was critically wounded during a robbery here Saturday, authorities said.

Police said the victims were apparently lined up inside the bank, a trailer, and shot "execution-style."

"I pulled into the bank parking lot about 10 a.m. and there was a man standing there," said Jack Whaley of Knoxville. "He told me, 'You better not go in there — something's happened.' I then walked to the back of the trailer, looked in the window and saw four people lying there."

"I could see the two men lying on one side and the two women were on the other."

Police, who questioned Whaley and the other man, said hundreds of spectators gathered at the Kodak branch of Citizens National Bank of Sevierville, causing traffic to back up on Tennessee 66.

FBI agent Harold Swanson said an unknown number of men escaped with an undetermined amount of money.

The state highway patrol in Knoxville said authorities had a description of the robbers' car, bearing North Carolina license plates.

A spokesman for the Sevier County Sheriff's Department said police were summoned when a bank official in Sevierville notified police that something was wrong at the Kodak branch and asked that an officer be sent to the scene.

Police said Kyle Beeler of Knoxville, who was the manager of the bank branch, Earl G. Underwood of Sevier County, a customer, and Linda Sims Davis of Sevier County, a bank teller, were killed in the robbery.

Bank teller Harriet Swaggerty of Sevier County was listed in critical condition at a hospital in Knoxville, authorities said.

Underwood was a Sevier County magistrate and director of rental properties for the University of Tennessee at Knoxville.

Peres emerges as Israeli Laborite choice

From News Wires
Tel Aviv — Defense Minister Shimon Peres emerged as the ruling Labor party's candidate for prime minister in a deal today that would make Foreign Minister Yisrael Alon the new defense minister in Peres' cabinet.

Party sources said the deal emerged after a nightlong meeting between Peres and Alon, who on Saturday quit the race for the party's nomination for prime minister in the name of party unity.

Peres' nomination was to be put to a formal vote by the party's central committee today and was expected to be carried unanimously, the sources said.

According to the sources, Labor party secretary Meir Zarmi has drafted a document spelling out the terms of the pact, which gives Alon "free choice of any cabinet post" if Peres wins the May 17 elections.

Shimon Peres

Alon will get the No. 2 spot — head of the defense ministry — as part of the deal, party sources said. He was commander of the Palmach forces in the 1948 war and long has coveted the post of defense minister.

Former Foreign Minister Abba Eban, Israel's erudite politician who speaks six languages and is a well-known figure in world diplomatic circles, was expected to be chosen for his old post in a new Peres administration.

Alon said his decision was taken "after already extensive consultations with friends of mine, both in the party and outside the party."

Peres, who barely lost the leadership post to Rabin at last February's party convention, had been softening his image as a hawk in recent days in an apparent bid for support from his party's left wing.

The Labor party has governed Israel under such leaders as David Ben-Gurion and Golda Meir since the Jewish state was founded in 1948. But many Israelis wonder whether the party can survive such recent shocks as a 38% inflation rate, labor unrest, and a string of financial scandals capped by the Rabin affair.

Rabin announced he would not seek a second term as prime minister because of scandal involving two bank accounts containing as much as $21,000 he and his wife held in a Washington, D.C., bank in violation of Israeli currency laws.

Peters Hollow folk knockin' eggs in traditional skirmish

From News Wires
Peters Hollow, Tenn. — Contestants arrive on Easter Sunday these days in automobiles instead of by horseback or in buggies. But in other respects, the annual Peters Hollow Easter Egg Fight is much the same as it was more than 100 years ago.

After church today, this little hollow along Stoney Creek will see hundreds of Easter egg "fighters" gather at the Ray Lowe home to renew a tradition dating back at least 154 years.

This is a contest to find the hardest boiled egg in these East Tennessee mountains. By sundown, there will be two champions — one among the youngsters and one among adults.

The style of the fight is unchanged. A challenger says, "I fight ye," or "Come hit me." The person challenged holds his egg in the palm of his hand, small end up. The challenger then strikes the egg with his own until one cracks.

There was a time when unlimited amounts of eggs were permitted. The contest was often settled after sundown under the light of someone's back porch. Now there is a limit of eight dozen eggs and it ends in the afternoon.

This combination homecoming, family picnic, folk festival started back around 1825 according to Tom Peters, the unofficial mayor of Stoney Creek.

Tradition has it that the annual contest started one long-ago Easter when the men of Rome Hollow challenged the men of Peters Hollow to a fight to see whose hens laid the hardest eggs.

The cracked eggs go to help feed youngsters at a local orphanage.

Between 400 and 600 persons are expected to attend this year's event, which traditionally has been held at the Lowe home.

Verbal, psychological pressures enter inflation battle

By Lisa Myers
(c) Chicago Sun-Times
Washington — President Carter's battle against inflation will be waged primarily within the government although the private sector will be the scene of considerable verbal and psychological warfare. The Chicago Sun-Times has learned

The anti-inflation "package" to be unveiled this week will focus on reducing the extent and cost of government regulation and actions affecting business and the economy

In return, most of the Fortune 500, the nation's largest corporations, will be asked to notify the government of price increases so the administration will have a chance to talk them out of those it deems unwarranted

"We think of it as formal discussion," an administration official said "But there will be a lot of debate over whether we should call it jawboning"

In any event, there will be nothing resembling the Nixon administration's wage and price controls, nor the Kennedy administration's voluntary guidelines. Even the broad prenotification plan floated by Carter's economic advisers a few weeks ago was shot down by business and labor

As a fallback position, the administration has decided to zero in on price increases in big and highly concentrated industries, which will be monitored closely. Small industries and labor unions basically will be left alone, sources said

Many details of the program have not been worked out. "I wouldn't look for an excessive amount of specificity in the President's message, which will be short," an official said. "It will be a broad outline of where we're going, of what we're prepared to do immediately, in the future and what's under study."

The program will require a large measure of consultation with and cooperation with the private sector," he said, "but there won't be any particularly onerous presence of government in the private sector."

ministration plans psychological warfare because AFL-CIO president George Meany has already ruled out virtually every other weapon. It hopes to moderate wage demands by reducing inflationary expectations. A large chunk of the program will entail an assault on government actions that contribute to inflation. This effort is likely to focus on reducing the sometimes exorbitant cost of regulations

Frozen at 320 degrees below 0, 15 hope to outrun death

By William Silberg
Detroit (UPI) — Robert Ettinger plans to outlive us all. So do those for whom Ettinger outlined a seemingly limitless tomorrow more than a decade ago — like the 15 or so corpses who lie in the isolation of a capsule bathed in 320-degree below zero cold.

The key to their hoped-for future is cryonics — preservation of the dead by freezing.

Ettinger 58, a physics professor from Suburban Oak Park first developed the cryonics concept in 1964. His book, "The Prospect of Immortality," brought him notoriety and sparked the formation of a number of cryonics societies across the nation.

Those who have chosen to outrun death in their liquid nitrogen baths are awaiting a future technology advanced enough to thaw them out and cure whatever killed them. Immortality? He would prefer the word not be used at all.

Indefinite extension
Immortality means different things to different people. I wouldn't be so presumptuous to talk about millions of years. We're talking about the indefinite extension of life or the conquest of so-called natural death.

Is cryonics still so strange, even 13 years later in a world where space flight and fantastic medical technology are taken for granted?

"If you talk about immortality and reviving the dead, then it sounds radical," he said. "But if you consider it as an extension of the same thing medical technology has been trying to do for years, then it's no more radical than the iron lung or perhaps penicillin was at one time."

More than a decade after proposing the idea, his followers still are a small and select group. He said most are in their mid-30s, middle-class and have some sort of extended academic backgrounds.

Nearly 30 persons had their bodies frozen at one point. But relatives of about half have opted for traditional burials. Yet to Ettinger, the movement is not on the wane.

Our numbers have continued to grow, though slowly. There's been a reduction in the novelty of it. But the numbers of people in the organization began very small and remains very small, but increasing.

The freezing process has been improved but still can take up to several days. It begins shortly after death with the body gradually cooled in ice and the blood replaced with a special chemical solution.

320 degrees
Ice is used to cool the body further and a second solution replaces the first. The body temperature then is lowered slowly to minus 320 degrees fahrenheit by use of liquid nitrogen vapor. Storage is in a capsule bathed in liquid nitrogen.

All equipment needed to complete the freezing process is available in a van owned and operated by Ettinger's cryonics group.

The mobile freezing unit has never been used, Ettinger said, but it has been on "stand-by" for several cases, including Ettinger's own wife.

Being preserved for some brighter tomorrow is no cheap undertaking.

Ettinger said the average bill for the process and indefinite storage period, as far as can be figured, is about $50,000. He hopes to cut the cost in half.

There are legal implications. One must be legally dead before freezing can begin. An assortment of documents must be signed well in advance.

The only existing storage facilities are on the east and west coasts, Ettinger said. His society plans to build a new $30,000 cryotarium this summer on five acres of donated land in the northwest part of Michigan's lower peninsula.

Horizontal elevators await testing as transit relief in urban centers

By Michael Conlan
(c) Newhouse News Service
Washington — They are called people movers or horizontal elevators. Operating on their own right-of-way, the cars are computer-controlled and quietly propelled by electric motors. They are spaced so one can be just a few seconds away. The doors open and close exactly like those on elevators.

John Marous of Westinghouse views the horizontal elevator, which his company makes, installed in downtown locations as a way to ease traffic congestion, conserve energy, curb urban decay and reduce pollution. They would complement — not compete — with mass transit. Marous, executive vice president in charge of construction, explained the other day how the horizontal elevator would work: "You would take a car, bus or train to convenient parking and intercept points, just outside the center city. Then you would transfer to a horizontal elevator that comes by every two minutes or so, or is 'on-call' like a vertical elevator."

either singly or in trains — would roll along elevated guideways of a mile or two or less with stops in and around shops, offices, apartments or entertainment centers downtown. The door would open automatically and passengers then would transfer to elevators, escalators or electric walks. Usually, there would not be an operator aboard.

Westinghouse officials point out the horizontal elevator is not new technology — it just hadn't been tested yet in an urban environment. For several years they have operated at speeds of up to 30 m.p.h. at the Tampa and Seattle-Tacoma airports, at the Busch Gardens theme park in Williamsburg, Va., and a dozen or so other locations.

Preliminary studies of the applications of people movers to downtown areas have begun in Cleveland, Houston, Los Angeles and St. Paul, funded as part of a $220 million matching grant announced by the Transportation Dept. in December. Baltimore, Detroit and Miami here allowed to use some federal funds they had already received to finance their proposed downtown people movers.

"Certainly our cities serve us best when they serve us efficiently," said then-Transportation Secretary William Coleman Jr. in announcing the grants.

"It's a fact that the private motor vehicle requires approximately 15 times more space per passenger than public transit. We cannot afford to give over our center cities to the automobile, nor can we in all wisdom concede our downtowns to the congestion that discourages travel and impedes commerce."

Westinghouse officials say the cost of building the guideway for a horizontal elevator ranges from $5 to $15 million a mile compared to $50 to $100 million for subways.

It typically costs less than 5 cents a passenger to operate and maintain a horizontal elevator, they add.

"The beautiful thing is that we don't have to invent anything new," said Marous. "All the technology exists today and has been proven in actual installations."

At the Tampa airport, travelers need never walk more than 700 feet from car to plane. A 40-second above ground ride in an air-conditioned, seatless car brings travelers into one of four terminals. Vehicles are available for boarding every 70 seconds.

Cars in the Seattle-Tacoma two-mile system, which is underground, can seat 106 passengers. Recorded announcements at each station inform passengers what boarding gates and other facilities are available at the six stations.

"Horizontal elevators are safe, fast and dependable," said Marous. He described it as an "energy miser" that uses 93% less energy than cars, trains or buses — in short, "an idea whose time has come."

Waiting for the message

In a few days President Carter will tell us the shape and content of his program to control inflation.

The standard spate of hints from Washington is that the text contains little which is startling, or selectively painful.

The President already has ruled out governmental restrictions on wage and price increases. That leaves the option of a less threatening form of an incomes policy — publicly pleading with crucial corporate sectors and unions to go easy.

If that is the linchpin of the plan, the least one can do is wish Mr. Carter luck.

A vivid illustration of the rigors of the assignment is the tentative agreement seemingly reached Saturday by the country's top steelmakers and the United Steelworkers Union. Details were foggy, but it appeared Big Steel had given ground for the union's demand for a guaranteed annual wage — also called lifetime security — plus at least a 3% pay increase each year, on top of cost of living protection.

To the degree the President demonstrates restraint on matters within his own domain, federal spending policies, he may, indeed, encourage comparable behavior in the private sector. But whereas everybody is loudly, habitually in support of stabilized federal spending, when the consequences directly affect, hurrahs turn quickly into shouts of anger. Look at the proposed new farm program as a case in point.

Treasury Secretary W. Michael Blumenthal says there is "no reason why, with sound policies," the rate of inflation in the U.S. can't be progressively reduced to 2% annually.

That kind of remark might cause a cynic to wonder if Blumenthal came to the cabinet from some Cloud Nine institute of theory, instead of the brutal world of corporate management. For it glosses over the hurt which large groups in the country may have to absorb, certainly in their expectations and almost certainly in person and pocketbook.

More of a realist is President Carter's personal public opinion consultant, Patrick Caddell.

It's Caddell's belief, based on polling data, that inflation is Mr. Carter's most worrisome domestic issue. "I can think of no issue that could destroy a President more," Caddell was quoted the other day. "He could be in serious trouble if he ends up with double-digit inflation after six or eight months."

All of this is more than enough to cook up enormous sympathy for Mr. Carter personally. Except that he wanted the job. And now he's got it.

Life and beauty renewed

The Christian religious message at Easter, of life restored and renewed, coincides this year with the most agreeable natural testimony.

An unseasonably warm period has produced a visual feast. The delights are unending. Just to see the sheen of green in fields and lawns would be enough.

But, oh, the coy charm of the magnolia tree in pink and cream; the vivid statements of joy which the Emperor tulips make; the free showering gold of the daf-fordils; the pastel delights of the hyacinths!

How could one miss the fruit trees in blossom? Is it possible that this year those fragile, delicate apricot flowers — a truly satisfactory description always fails — somehow will finally escape wind and chill and become beguiling table treats by and by?

That would be a splendid additional dividend. But for what is presently cast before us, we should consider ourselves blessed.

Court acts to protect children

It is to be hoped that county welfare workers through Nebraska, and county boards, have been digesting a State Supreme Court opinion issued March 23. If they have not, simple prudence dictates they'd better be about the task.

In its holding, the high court clearly extended grounds on which counties can be successfully sued for damages under the Political Subdivisions Tort Claims Act.

The hasty or superficial reader of the court's opinion in Koepf v. County of York might miss the real significance. Without question, the high court agreed with the lower court that York County wasn't liable in the death of a year-old child. The infant sustained fatal injuries in a foster home where he had been placed by the York County Welfare Dept.

But as the court carefully noted, there had been conflicting evidence about the foster home — some good, some disturbing. The trial judge came down on the side of no culpability. Supreme Court judges said they were not in a position to challenge that finding.

Nevertheless, the court did take the occasion to announce a case law declaration never made before in Nebraska and one which henceforth becomes the rule:

"Placement in foster homes of defenseless children, and the supervision of their health and care, once committed to the custody of the welfare department, must be accomplished with reasonable care commensurate with the circumstances. We hold that a political subdivision of this state can be held liable for a breach of that duty."

So now it is quite clear: there is a specific, court-ordered responsibility on county welfare departments with respect to children under their supervision.

Failure to live up to that important custodial responsibility makes county welfare employees, and their superiors, vulnerable to civil litigation.

A Schlesinger victory

By Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

After a marathon meeting behind closed doors at the White House, President Carter brushed aside counsels of delay from his chief economic advisers and ordered his energy message issued April 20 on schedule, no matter how fierce the criticism.

That constituted a major victory for energy czar James Schlesinger, who thereby survived his first bureaucratic assault. During the meeting, which lasted from 3:30 p.m. until nearly 8 p.m. Wednesday with the President present throughout, Schlesinger argued against delay.

Top presidential aide Hamilton Jordan had wanted this meeting to guarantee him full time to discuss with the President and Schlesinger the political impact, mostly adverse, of the energy plan. But most of the objections at the meeting came from the economic triumvirate: Treasury Secretary W. Michael Blumenthal; budget director Bert Lance and chief economic adviser Charles Schultze.

Arguing that statistics revealing the national economic impact of Schlesinger's conservation proposals are not now available, the economic officials urged Carter to delay the message until this vital information is at hand. The delay, they added, should be at least one month.

But Carter is determined, to the point of obsession, to fulfill his commitments. On Thursday he decreed that the message would come out April 20.

Yes, the easy shots are hard

By Sydney Harns

It is 5-4 in Borg's favor in the second set. Borg has won the first set, 6-4, and now has a triple match point on Connors. This means he has three consecutive chances to win the set, the match, and the $100,000 first prize.

On one point, Borg hit wide. On another, he was aces. Nothing to do about that. But it was the third point that really hurt. The ball dropped easily on Borg's side of the net. The whole court was open — any shot by Borg would have won the match.

But Borg planted his feet, moved into the backhand stroke and came up short. The ball hit the tape and rolled back near his feet.

And a million hackers like myself were swept with a deep wave of empathy. We knew exactly how Borg felt — it had happened to us countless times. But that one of the two greatest players in the world could falter and flub in the same way gave us a keener realization that, despite our disparate skills, we are all more alike than we are different.

There is an ancient platitude in tennis — and perhaps in other sports — that the hard shots are easy, the easy shots hard. This has nothing to do with their technical execution, and everything to do with one's state of mind.

A hard fast shot gives you no time to think. And thinking can be fatal in a reflexive activity. Players are at their best when they respond automatically, before there is time for the cerebral cortex to start whirring.

On a slow easy shot — as every duffer knows — the mind impedes the nervous system, intervenes between the event and the response.

The same is true in esthetic endeavors. A poor pianist plays the keys. An adequate pianist plays the notes. But a good pianist plays the music, he thinks no more about the keys or the notes than a good typist is aware of the typewriter keys. The hands seem to be playing by themselves, short-circuiting the conscious mind.

We have lately become aware of the two "hemispheres" of the brain, one half rational and linear and logical, the other half intuitive and metaphorical. That is the part that still needs developing, even in Borg.

Cooling inflation-fevered hospitals

By Joseph A. Califano, Jr.
Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare

Few Americans realize how hospital cost inflation punishes their pocketbooks.

If you pay your own health insurance premiums, you no doubt have felt the impact of escalating hospital costs. They were in large measure responsible for the 15% to 20% average hike in commercial health insurance rates last year.

If you had to pay any hospital costs out of your own wallet, you felt the jolt of the nationwide 15% increase in hospital costs last year — a rise greater than increases in the price of food or even energy.

But you also paid for hospital cost inflation in other, less obvious ways.

If your employer pays for your health insurance, you probably received a smaller pay raise than you would have. Instead of passing the money on to you, your employer held money back to cover increased cost of your insurance.

If you bought a new car, escalating health-care costs also cost you money. One example: In 1975, $119 of the cost of each new Ford went toward paying health insurance premiums for Ford Motor Co. workers.

Ballooning health costs also played a large role in raising your taxes — or in preventing tax cuts.

For example, federal outlays for health care have increased six-fold in the last decade. Today, 12c of every dollar the federal government spends goes for health care.

Your state taxes also reflect inflated hospital costs. In 1971, states paid $3 billion as their share of the federal-state Medicaid program for the poor. By 1976, the states' share had more than doubled, to $7 billion.

In these and countless other ways, Americans are paying the price for uncontrolled inflation in hospital costs. The statistics are sobering:

- Since 1950, the cost of a day's stay in the hospital has increased more than 1,000%, compared with a 138% increase in overall prices.

- Today it costs an average of about $180 to spend a day in a hospital, compared with $44 in 1965.

- Today the average hospital stay costs more than $1,200, compared with $311 in 1965.

- Hospital costs climbed 15% in 1976 alone, more than double the 6% increase in the overall cost-of-living.

These figures — and their long-range implications — have led President Carter to propose putting a temporary ceiling on hospital cost increases, beginning in October.

Why give such special attention to hospital costs?

First, they represent 40% of all health care costs and have been rising faster than any other segment of health care.

Second, inflation in hospital costs is generated by factors virtually unique to this one industry.

One factor is the source of hospital income. More than 90% of all hospital patient payments come not directly from patients, but from third-party payors — such as Blue Cross, Medicaid, or Medicare. Experts agree one result of this system is that patients and physicians don't exert pressure to hold down hospital costs because they're not really aware what those costs are.

The second inflation-boosting factor is a kind of "cost-plus" reimbursement system. In essence, hospital costs — including expensive equipment and construction — are spread

The hospital cost containment program proposed by the Carter administration would not "freeze" the rates hospitals can charge patients. Instead, it would aim only at putting a ceiling on the size of the increase.

Neither would it freeze hospital workers' wages. The ceiling would be designed to accommodate increases in hospital revenues adequate to cover raises for hospital workers to keep pace with wage increases in other sectors of the economy.

The ceiling would cover revenues from all patients, whatever the source of payment — Medicare, Medicaid, Blue Cross, commercial insurers or individuals.

The precise ceiling has not been determined. It would be worked out in consultation with all affected parties — hospitals, physicians, nurses, consumers, industry, labor, Congress and the states.

In estimating Fiscal Year 1978 federal outlays, HEW calculated the effects of a 9% ceiling on increases in each hospital's revenues. The ceiling actually established could be different. In addition, the proposal would include a process for permitting exceptions.

Based on the illustrative 9% ceiling plus an allowance of an added 1% for exceptions, the proposal could save the federal government $829 million in Medicare and Medicaid payments during Fiscal 1978. By Fiscal 1981, the proposal could save those two programs alone an estimated $3.5 billion.

And the proposal also would cut states' costs for their share of Medicaid — by an estimated $115 million in Fiscal 1978, and by $512 million in Fiscal 1981.

The ceiling is viewed as a short-term but essential step in the fight against inflation of hospital costs. It would be replaced by a more comprehensive cost containment program.

It is important to stress that the administration has no preconceptions about the specific form such a long-range cost containment program might take. Recommendations and suggestions from the broadest possible public base would be sought.

—From the Department of Health, Education and Welfare among all patients. Whether or not a particular patient uses a particular piece of equipment, he or she will help pay for it.

This reimbursement system has led hospitals to purchase expensive and exotic new equipment and expand hospital buildings. As a result, hospitals have underutilized equipment and space. Today the nation has an excess of 100,000 hospital beds that cost $2 billion a year to maintain.

It is no wonder hospitals have developed a "spend more, get more" attitude.

The temporary ceiling Carter proposes would give time to determine how to cope with this highly complex inflationary problem. And time is desperately needed because, at their current rate, hospital costs will double in five years.

The nation simply cannot afford to let that happen.

OPINIONS

Jimmy Carter is the Mark Fidrych of politics

It is Easter and Washington is quiet.

Congress has gone off for what used to be called the Easter Recess and is now known as a "District Work Period." The President has gone to Georgia to renew his roots, and perhaps sneak a look at his polls.

Flattery has gotten him everywhere.

The American people, who didn't even know who he was a year ago, have lost their heads over him. One poll shows him at 80% approval rating.

And what has he done?

He walked down Pennsylvania Avenue on Inauguration Day. He wore a sweater on television.

He retired the trumpeters and the limousine fleet. He went on a radio call-in show with Walter Cronkite and got a girl in Maryland a government job. He went to Clinton, Mass., and told the people they were absolutely marvelous and his food bills are high, too. The crowd went wild.

He sent Congress a reorganization bill. It won't cost any jobs or save any money. Congress said, hey, wait a minute, what does it do?

Carter said none of your business, sign here. Congress tugged its forelock and said, "Yes, sir."

Carter didn't tell Congress it was wonderful. He said he was going to cut out 16 dams in their home districts. They said you can't do that. And he said, just for that, I'm going to study 14 more for extinction.

Carter's polls went up another few notches.

Carter went to the ballet, the opera, the theater. He caused a treehouse to be built for his daughter Amy. He told Congress he was going to reorganize the entire energy situation.

Congress said how? He said watch for the grand opening April 20.

He announced he was going to sell his yacht. He sent Cyrus Vance off to negotiate a new era in peace. Vance got to Moscow, opened his briefcase and put his offer on the table. Leonid Brezhnev gave him a couple of hours to get out of town.

A fiasco? Not at all. It was a success. Carter told American people, and if we have one more like it, I'll start up the arms race again.

Nobody seemed disturbed. Looked at in a certain way, it was a triumph. He didn't disarm the Soviets, but he disarmed Sen. Henry Jackson, who told Carter to "hang tough." The Cold Warriors have joined his fan club.

Not a great deal has been said about unemployment, which was going to be the first order of business. He's been too busy about human rights.

The Republicans claim he's stolen their thunder. Americans are so delighted to have a president who doesn't sweat at his news conferences, and doesn't stumble, they don't pay any attention.

He hasn't been able to reduce the size of the White House staff yet. It's grown a bit since he took office. He hasn't been able to reduce the budget yet, either. As a matter of fact, the White House staff got a raise, but since it stopped a thousand short of what it might have been, he claimed a "savings."

Poor Congress, busy cleaning its stables since it got a pay increase, didn't dare protest. According to an NBC poll, 74% of the American people disapprove of Congress's pay raise. Nobody said a word about the new White House increase.

He hasn't gotten around to making those cuts in the Pentagon budget yet. He may even go ahead with the B1 bomber, even though during the campaign he said he wouldn't. It doesn't matter, 89% of the American people think Carter is "sincere."

So it's been a beautiful spring for Jimmy Carter. He loves everybody, and everybody, it seems, loves him. His success is an argument for an inactive presidency. If he does something, he might spoil everything.

He's a little like Mark Fidrych, the Detroit pitcher. Fidrych, unfortunately, is benched until June with a torn ligament. "The Bird," who is also an idol with the stands, spends a great deal of his time on the preliminaries. He is extremely fussy about the mound. He gets down on his hands and knees to rake the dirt and rearrange it, scouring the terrain for noisy ants who might disturb his concentration or grasshoppers who might trample him. He talks to the ball as lovingly and intimately as Carter talks to the American people.

Then he throws the pitch. Carter hasn't done that quite yet. He's enjoying preparing the mound, taking bows. Any minute now, he will have to play ball.

We have made . . . progress?

By Raymond J. Callahan
Lincoln

Hometown childhood the ten years fond memories considered by each as the best years. The days of no drive in movies, one car to a street a makeshift bicycle barrel staves for skis, strap-on ice runners, the old fishing hole, the first holding of hands, the bashful kiss, the games, the make believe world of the good old days.

The setting of my early days was much the same as it was for Walter R. Meier (FOCUS March) by the place, however, many miles from here upstate New York. The city of New York was distant, Nebraska light years away and California another universe.

The Ten Mile River which meandered through town was a source of recreation, food and drink. We swam, we fished and we drank. The theater green was a playground of our own choosing, mumbletypeg leap frog, wrestling. Hide and seek we played all over town behind stores, in yard trees behind the bank, in sheds any place in town. We ran, we laughed, we hollered far into the night on weekends.

Sidewalks and roads were for the older folks. The distance was shorter, cross lots. From place to place we went across lawns, over or under fences, waving to people along the way, receiving a wave in return, petting a dog, watching the wagging tail, shooting him home when he tried to tag along.

On and on could the words flow to describe my youth which would undoubtedly say it for all the young throughout the country at that time. We were free — perhaps the most free, most unencumbered generation this country has ever known.

Rather than challenge today's youth to emulate my generation, I express my regrets and apologize for not passing to them the freedom I had.

We took the school out of the center of town and moved it beyond walking distance. The gymnasium that was open evenings and weekends is now locked and forbidden. We have allowed the government to dictate the school the children must attend and who their classmates will be.

The river is polluted, the flow laggard and dispirited, the dam gone. The open lots grow cement. The bank has a guard, there is a State Trooper barracks on the outskirts of town, a county sheriff's car creeps from street to street. The soda fountain is gone. Hide and seek must be played indoors so as not to disturb the neighbors. House doors are locked early, opened to a knock only part way because the chain has not yet been unfastened. The theater green is fenced with no trespassing signs predominant. The bashful kiss is no more, we opened the bedroom door. Street play horsing around, hiding behind stores or the bank or in garages is interrupted by flashing red lights and uniformed people.

Mom has gone to work. Television has taken her role. We took the food out of the kitchen and put it in a fast food joint or wrapped it precooked in fancy foil. We scrapped the solid transportation of the Model A, replaced it with decorative death machines. We buy expensive gadgets to exercise and ride while mowing the lawn. We discarded the word medicine and replaced it with drug, each a miracle. We disowned our Movie Queens and replaced them with sex symbols. We have buried the heroes and replaced these too with sex symbols.

We have made everything in stant. We have made progress. We have given our children and grandchildren all those things we did not have, not realizing or refusing to realize that most of those things we did not need and they do not need.

Curtis wrong on ethics

Poppcock. That's our reaction to one of the reasons advanced by Sen. Carl Curtis for opposing the code of ethics adopted by the U.S. Senate. Curtis is quoted as saying that the code will prevent many people who ought to serve in Congress from serving.

In fact, if it lives up to its promise, it might scare out some of the money grubbers who would take advantage of congressional office to unethically build personal fortunes, and bring a better quality of senator.

Now if the Senate will address itself to the matter of appropriate pay raises on which no vote is needed, it will be well on the way to restoring public confidence.

State school aid

Passage of LB33 would add considerably to the state funding at McCook and other schools. However, we stand with Gov. Evans in opposition to its passage in that it would break the budget.

Theoretically, as the state funding rises, the local demand would decrease. But it simply hasn't worked out in that manner. If schools across the state received an additional $20 million in local property taxes, we think would feel virtually no relief.

—McCook Daily Gazette

Local mill levies seem to grow despite the offsetting state aid. It may be asking the impossible to hope that the key to a better education, as opposed to merely a more expensive one, can be found. That chances that it will, however, are not necessarily greater the higher one goes in the governmental structure.

Pop tax violates equity

The tax on soda pop is not scaled to ability to pay. All persons pay the tax, no matter how much money they earn. For those inclined to classify soda pop as a luxury, arguing that only those who can afford to buy the beverage should buy it, let them argue with the soda pop industry.

We would hope the members of the Unicameral will not view a soda pop tax as a convenient way to meet funding requirements which should be paid out of the general fund. If the funds are really needed, we should all pay them.

Legislative funny farm

While the serious issues of water, energy, unemployment, economic problems and many others are being sidestepped by a committee irresponsible Legislature, they find time instead to argue and toss about what they are to name the new sports complex at the University of Nebraska.

It is time for the members of Nebraska's funny farm to stop this childish operation and get down to serious business.

—Pierce County Leader

Subsidizing Colorado

So Colorado gets the solar energy research unit? We could have told you that long ago when dozens of states were in competition.

One of our favorite states, Colorado is also a favorite of the politicians. As a result, more federal installations are in that state than in any other.

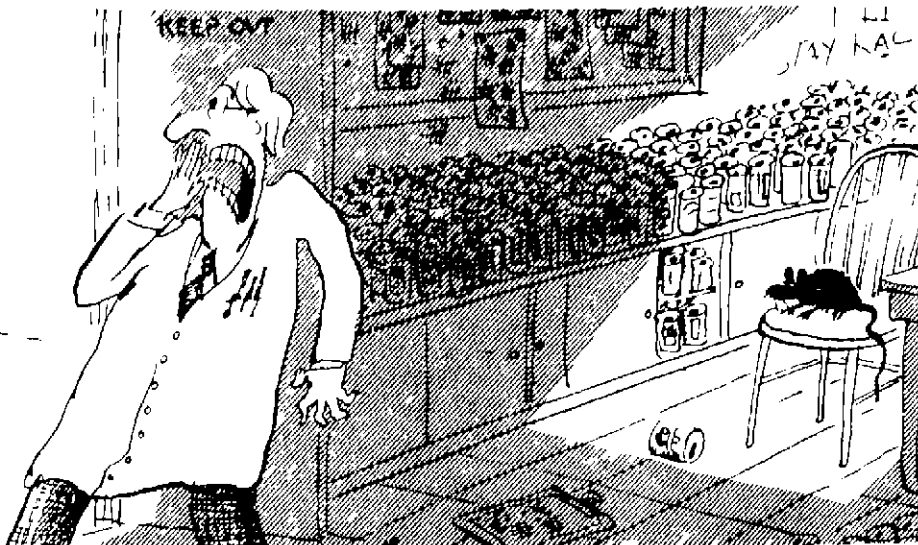

And so it goes, the other 49 states subsidizing Colorado when that state needs subsidies about like Nevada needs another job.

—Keith County News

On and on and on could the words flow to describe all those things we have created to give comfort to the young and to satisfy our own greed.

Challenge youth to emulate our generation? What would we let them do and where would we let them do it?

Hooray for us, and the children be damned!

'Come quick . . . The guy who was testing the effects of saccharin in 800 cans of diet pop just turned into a rat!'

Arctic sun's arrival reason for hoopla at mining town of Longyearbyen

By Hugh A. Mulligan

Longyearbyen, Spitsbergen (AP) — "The Sun Is On Its Way," the Svalbard Post, the world's northernmost newspaper, announced in a banner headline. Sure enough, there was a photo, taken from a small plane at 4,000 feet, to prove it.

To the 1,007 Norwegian inhabitants of this coal mining community that is closer to the North Pole than Plains, Ga., is to Washington, D.C., editor Otto Risanger's story was the biggest news since a Russian miner gouged out a polar bear's eyes in an epic hand-to-paw mugging.

After nearly four months of night, with the frozen, treeless landscape lit only by the occasional flash of a snowmobile headlamp and temperatures around 36 below, the sun had begun its climb toward nightless day. Already the first faint grey of false dawn outglimmered the pale stars, and light was expanding fast, at the rate of 35 minutes a day, into the promise of a real day.

Folks up and down the valley in the neat prefab houses were getting ready to celebrate "Solfest," feast of the sun, the minute it peeked over the glacier.

On Solfest, which is bigger than Christmas here in Santa's backyard, an extra beer might be proclaimed at the Houset, the company cafe next to the post office. There'll be a big dance, a sing-along in the hall where movies are shown three times a week, a flower show to see who grew the best house plants with lights, and lots of parties with the skis stacked outside the houses like one long snow fence.

Hoist vodkas

Even the Russians, who outnumber the Norwegians more than two-to-one in this Arctic outpost will hoist a few vodkas because this year the sun's return coincides with an accredited Communist holiday.

The return of the sun should be a happy time, but instead people become irritable and quarrelsome, muses Dr. Aren Ryen, one of two doctors employed by Store Norske, the state-owned Norwegian coal company that runs everything here except the Russians, who run their own show. "With the coming of light, people get more stress and tension. The dark time is nice and cozy and everyone is friendly, but it's not natural to live like a bear in a hole. Seeing the sun again is always such a fantastic adventure."

People expand, become more aggressive.

Dr. Ryen and his colleague, Dr. Knut Andersen, run a hospital for some 550 men, mostly miners who tunnel through the permafrost, 250 women, mostly housewives, clerks and canteen help, but also a girl pilot, a girl scientist and a few liberated truck drivers, and nearly 200 children. But their recent caseload also included an anesthetizing a reindeer caught in a fox trap, shooting another whose antlers were ensnared in barbed wire left by the German invaders and setting a broken leg for a man who got tripped up in the runners of his dogsled.

Diseases hit

"Last year 40% of our human patients had flu or a bad cold," Dr. Ryen says. "Now we have an outbreak of tropical diseases. Whatever is going on the mainland hits here as soon as the weekly plane gets in." Snowmobile accidents, including a man who froze to death when he ran out of gas and a couple who plunged into a partially frozen lake, outnumber automobile accidents. There are only 60 motor vehicles, mostly coal trucks, on the 30 miles of road, all privately owned by the coal company but there are more than 500 snowmobiles, one for every two inhabitants.

The Russian who survived the run-in with the polar bear was treated by his own doctors at Barentsburg, the Russian stallations and gives all signatory nations equal mining, hunting and fishing rights

Russians mining

Since 1932, when they bought the Barentsburg mine from the Dutch, only the Russians have exercised their treaty rights to any great extent, although the Americans, French and others have drilled in vain for oil, and a number of nations maintain scientific stations.

The Soviets mine 450,000 tons of coal a year, about the same as the Norwegians, but use twice as many people despite having the world's most advanced mining technology. "This is not so much Soviet inefficiency, but an indication of how important they regard this place," says Otto Saebø, the Norwegian airport chief.

Geographically, the ice-covered archipelago lies dead center of the strategic balance between East and West, and there is no doubt that the Russians consider it important. The nuclear submarines of their large northern fleet at Murmansk traverse the Barents Sea, between here and Norway, to get to the Atlantic. So do their ocean-going trawlers and factory ships.

Lying between 74 and 81 degrees north latitude, Svalbard is 60% covered by glaciers and most of what is left is buried under permafrost up to 1,000 feet deep. The Gulf Stream or North Atlantic Drift, passing the west coast, makes the climate more tolerable than other polar lands this far north and frees the fjords of ice for a few months in summer so the coal boats can get in and out. This is as far north as anyone leads anything approaching ordinary family life. You'd have to head a good ways south, like a New Yorker wintering in Miami, to meet an Eskimo, a Laplander or an Alaskan.

What it does have is an East-West confrontation, with diplomatic notes passing between Oslo and Moscow over everything from helicopter concessions to the black market sale of samovar.

Norway was given "full and absolute sovereignty" over Svalbard, the name for the whole archipelago, after World War I. The Svalbard Treaty, since ratified by 41 countries including the super powers, prohibits any military in-

Fast foods choking supermarkets

(c) New York Times

Atlanta — Eating out has become so popular in the United States that one of the great American merchandising institutions, the supermarket, is in economic trouble.

Because more people live alone, more women work and more leisure money is available, Americans now spend one of every three food dollars in restaurants and fast-food shops. A decade ago, the ratio was one of every five dollars. A decade hence, the National Restaurant Assn. estimates, the ratio may be one of every two dollars.

New steak houses and convenient, economical "takeouts" are proliferating from coast to coast, while the country's 30,000 supermarkets are retrenching, battling against higher prices and operating costs and casting about desperately for new merchandising methods. A slowdown in population growth is exacerbating the problem.

Wider range

Some stores have drawn in more shoppers by adding a wider range of stock, everything from motor oil to prescription medicines to fast-food counters. But most stores are selling no more food now than they were five years ago.

A recent Harvard study of supermarkets, sponsored by Family Circle magazine and the Food Marketing Institute, a Washington-based supermarket trade association, predicted grocery store sales would increase no more than 2% annually through 1980, as against an annual 3.5% increase through the 1960s and early 1970s. The study concluded:

"It seems virtually certain that spending for food away from home will increase at a faster rate than food store sales in the period 1975-80."

Nancy Levine, a 30-year-old medical technologist, provided some perspective on the eating-out situation as she lunched the other day in suburban Los Angeles at the Great American Food and Beverage Company.

No guilt

"I eat out at least three times a week," she said. "Nobody feels guilty any more if they don't cook every meal at home. There is money to eat out because so many people are working. Besides, nobody has time to do a lot of cooking and dishwashing."

In New York City, perhaps the nation's leading restaurant town, Barbara Rubel, a single, 34-year-old assistant to the president of an insurance company, said, "There is more and more demand in America today for new food experiences, ethnic food, different dishes. If I come home tonight and I'm in the mood for Chinese food, I'll just go out. It's easier. Sometimes it's cheaper."

The eating habits of people like Barbara Rubel and Nancy Levine help to explain why five new restaurants have opened along a six-block stretch of Columbus Avenue near Miss Rubel's upper west side apartment.

4,000 McDonald's

They are the reason that McDonald's now has more than 4,000 restaurants in 22 countries and is opening a new unit every 24 hours. They are the reason Heinz is increasing ketchup sales to restaurants by 10% annually. And they are the reason Grant C. Gentry, the chairman of the A&P supermarket chain, recently said, "If there is any one single opportunity that faces us today, it is the disposition of people to eat away from home. We can and must, if we are to survive, meet this challenge now."

Contrast to Gentry's somber tones with the optimism of Patrick L. O'Malley, president of the National Restaurant Assn., with headquarters in Chicago. He recently told a convention of restaurateurs, "We are at a point, as an industry, where we are the beneficiary of a new American lifestyle."

Soviet fishing vessel seized

New York (AP) — The Coast Guard seized a Soviet fishing vessel Saturday night for allegedly catching too many fish inside the United States' new fishing boundaries. It was the first impoundment under the 5-week-old, 200-mile limit. In the last two weeks, the federal government refused to let the Coast Guard seize three Soviet fishing ships for alleged violations. Some congressmen and fishing experts, especially in the Northeast where fishing is a major economic force, had feared the new, extended boundaries would be undermined by those refusals.

Clark Aid Base may be dropped

Washington (AP) — A Senate Foreign Relations Committee staff report suggests the United States may be able to abandon Clark Air Base in the Philippines if the Philippine government demands too high a price for a new base agreement. On the other hand, the report says it is important for the United States to retain the use of the Subic Naval Base and the adjacent Cubi Naval Air Station, unless major changes are contemplated in the deployment of the 7th Fleet.

Plane collisions kill at least 7

By United Press International

A pair of midair collisions Saturday killed at least seven and destroyed four airplanes. A single-engine Cessna 195 collided with a twin-engine Nord 262 making a landing approach at Reading, Pa., airport, killing at least four. Two single-engine planes smashed into each other near the Boulder, Colo., city reservoir and killed at least three, officials said.

Gasping patient provides link in Michigan botulism

Pontiac, Mich. (UPI) — An intensive care patient so sick he could barely talk blurted out the missing link that helped doctors solve a medical mystery and prevent deaths in the nation's worst botulism outbreak.

John Slater, 26, Pontiac, was fighting paralysis at St. Joseph Mercy Hospital March 30. In the next bed, doctors asked another struggling victim, Diane Sprenger, a nurse at the hospital, where and what she had eaten recently.

She mentioned Trini and Carmen's Mexican restaurant next door to the hospital.

Slater gasped that he, too, had been there.

It was the missing link doctors frantically needed as the emergency room filled with new victims of the mystifying epidemic.

Clue found

"The connection between the food cases led to the important clue," said Dr. Robert Lacey, Oakland County health director. "At that moment, we knew where to look."

New arrivals confirmed they patronized the restaurant between Monday, March 28, and Thursday, March 31, when the small but popular establishment was closed.

The source was improperly home-canned green peppers used in a hot sauce served with almost every item on the menu.

By Friday, when the eight-day incubation period expired, 45 persons had been listed as confirmed victims. Miss Sprenger was still in critical condition.

The crisis has officially ended, but the memories and devastation linger.

Mexican pizza

Mike Penrod, 35, a college counselor from Detroit, is recuperating with Slater.

Victims reported a frightening array of maladies, including nausea, vomiting, diarrhea, headaches, difficulty in swallowing, breathing trouble, near-blindness and paralysis.

"You don't have any pain," Penrod said describing his symptoms with a raspy voice caused by the poison. "It's a fog rolling in on you. Someone is telling you the fog will kill you, but it has no pain."

"But you know what's happening. You sip through a straw and it bubbles up in your nose. The doctor says wrinkle your forehead, stick out your tongue or just shrug your shoulders, and you can't. They tap your ear, but you can't hear."

Nonphysical effects also plagued the victims and the 750 other patrons who somehow missed the tainted peppers. Vacations and trips were postponed or canceled. Work days were lost. Lives were suspended for a week as customers waited for their bodies to give the first warning.

The restaurant owners, Trinidad and Carmen Martinez, already face three damage suits and possible criminal charges because of a state law that bans restaurants from serving home-canned food.

Hoover's bum image slowly transforming

By Jules Loh

West Branch, Iowa (AP) — There is a quiet stirring on the banks of Wapsinonoc Creek. The people here are cheered by it.

According to Thomas Thalken, who ought to know, Americans are increasingly interested in the life and accomplishments of the nation's 31st president, the first from west of the Mississippi and the one many here feel got a bum rap from history: Herbert Hoover.

"He's been the most maligned man in public life," Thalken said. "It's still called the Hoover depression," but that's nothing. Even the drought of the thirties is called the Hoover drought as if he had something to do with the rain."

Thalken is the director of the Herbert Hoover Presidential Library, a facility he feels is responsible for a slow, but sure, reassessment of Hoover's place in history.

New questions

"We're servicing a new generation of researchers," he said. "They are asking new questions, questions that wouldn't have been asked 25 or 30 years ago when the events were still too fresh."

"We've averaged about 140 researchers a year visiting the library since it opened in 1966 and the number is growing every year."

Besides the scholarly books, our resources have resulted in 177 published volumes, 85 articles for historical journals, 32 master degree theses and more than 187 doctoral dissertations. We receive hundreds of research requests through the mail and they are growing more frequent too. The truth about Herbert Hoover is emerging."

Four nations might attain independence

San Juan, Puerto Rico (UPI) — The western hemisphere could get as many as four new independent nations this year.

The former British Caribbean colonies of St. Kitts, Dominica, St. Vincent and St. Lucia are all moving toward independence.

There is little doubt that before his death in 1964 at the age of 90, Herbert Hoover had recaptured the affection of his countrymen, if not their esteem. Thalken feels he now is winning the latter, and it's high time.

Thalken says activity at the library backs up his contention that Hoover could do nothing to prevent the Great Depression and sought every conceivable way to stem it, but it was like trying to fold a road map in the wind.

Aura of saint

Whatever the final judgment of historians, here in his hometown of West Branch, the aura of Herbert Hoover is almost that of a saint.

West Branch is a town of 1,300, just east of Iowa City, in a pastoral setting that is itself Hooversque: stern farm houses with fences like starched collars sprinkled among carefully squared fields on the rolling prairie, a Grant Wood canvas from horizon to horizon.

School children tip-toe through the two-room white-washed cabin where Hoover was born as though it were a church. At the nearby museum, adjoining the library, they gaze at glass-encased Hoover relics.

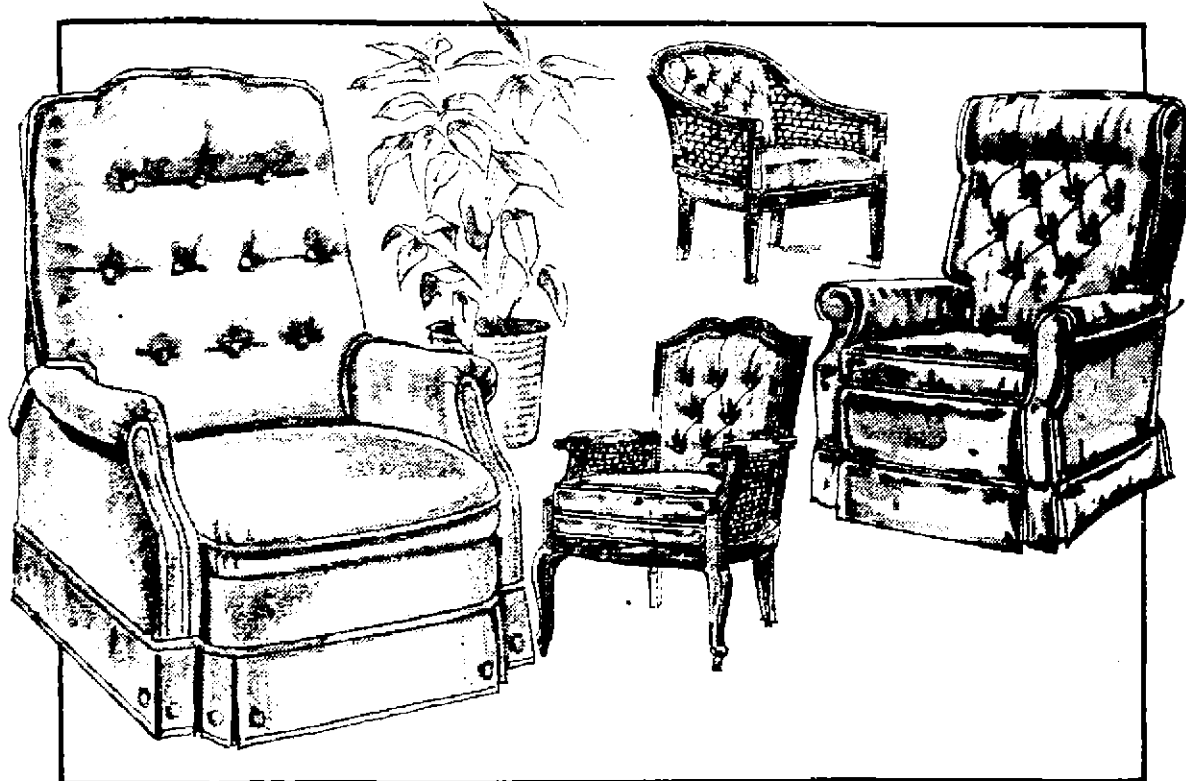

Adults roaming the exhibits seem to linger longer over items of Hoover's private life than documents of his public career — the oil lamps of his childhood, his fishing rod, his wife's collection of Ming porcelain, his pipes, and his supply of kitchen matches next to the rock he used to strike them on.

Perhaps the most popular exhibit is the display of correspondence between the 31st president and Harry Truman, the 33rd, two men whose friendship remained deep until the end. And perhaps, like that of his friend, Herbert Hoover's career will be reevaluated favorably.

In West Branch, though, there is no need for it. One visitor, an elderly Iowan, studied the exchange of letters and after a while said thoughtfully to his wife:

"Well, I've always admired Hoover. I guess if he saw something in that other fellow, I ought to like Harry Truman too."

Ralph Hirsch rides his bicycle to work through busy Philadelphia traffic, then folds his 21-pound bike up and carries it with him.

Bicyclists pedaling past gas-starved commuters

By Bob Dvorchak
Philadelphia (AP) — Gearing down for a quick start in heavy city traffic or free-wheeling through the countryside on a leisurely weekend tour, Ralph Hirsch enjoys the freedom of setting his own pace.

"Biking gives you a great deal of flexibility," said Hirsch, 46.

You have the feeling of doing something for yourself. You are in charge of a segment of your life. It's a simpler way of getting about, rather than operating a large, heavy, extremely complex piece of machinery," he said.

Hirsch is the executive director of the Bicycle and Pedestrian Transportation Research Center here. He also is a representative of the League of American Wheelmen, a 97-year-old organization headquartered in Palatka Ill.

He rides his bike maybe 320 days a year — to work or for recreation. When city transit workers threatened to strike here recently, Hirsch had the answer for worried commuters.

Makes contribution

The bicycle has a lot to contribute to urban transportation. Perhaps it takes a crisis, such as a gasoline shortage or a transit strike, to bring home to us how important that contribution can be," he said.

According to an A.C. Nielson survey of 2,000 households in Pennsylvania, 40% of the people said they ride a bike. The survey was done for the Bicycle Policy Committee of the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation.

Projected statewide, that means 5 million people huff and puff while balancing themselves on the two-wheeled contraption.

And bike trails are almost everywhere.

The mushrooming bike clubs in southeastern Pennsylvania can choose between 14 trails that go 189 miles along rivers and streams, past museums and flower gardens that front Victorian houses and through wooded parks and covered bridges.

In addition, the East Coast Bicycle Trail, one of the largest in the country, cuts through the state on its 3,000-mile trip from Richmond, Va., to Boston, Mass. For the adventurous, there's the 4,000-mile Trans-America Trail from Williamsburg, Va., to Oregon.

Extended vacations

Hirsch usually takes an extended bike vacation, like a two-week swing through Europe, each year. He also logs numerous weekend trips, like biking to a campsite and staying overnight.

Picnic lunches or social gatherings in parks are very popular.

There are drawbacks, however. Broken glass, wet leaves, gravel, thieves, dogs and motorized traffic can be a pain.

For the third straight year, accidents involving bicycles hit a record in 1976. Reported accidents numbered about 300,000, with 39 bicyclists killed.

Still, the exercise and charm of pedaling along a quiet road is winning over converts, most of them on sleek, multi-g geared models.

Over 1 million bikes are sold in the state each year, with a total sales value of $88 million. The average bike costs $75.

"You can do as much or little of it as your ability allows. You can do it when you're 80 or 90 years old," Hirsch said.

"It's not like playing football, where you have to depend on other people on a team. Or golf, where you have to belong to a club or make extensive reservations," he added.

Bill aims to better U.S. rural housing

(c) Newhouse News Service
Washington — A major overhaul of federal housing laws to make it easier for rural Americans to obtain "decent" housing was proposed last week by Reps. Stan Lunsane, D-N.Y., and Les AuCoin, D-Ore.

The measure would require implementation of a rural rent-subsidy program, establish a broader homeownership subsidy program, and institute an escrow system to help prevent foreclosures against rural homeowners.

The sponsors cited statistics indicating that 19 million rural American families live in homes without plumbing, that 14 million other families have no kitchens, and that 13 million families live in overcrowded conditions.

They said 5 million families live in rural homes with major structural deficiencies.

The housing needs in rural areas of the country are staggering in many cases, they are absolutely shocking," AuCoin said.

AuCoin said the legislation would ensure that most loans go to needy, elderly or handicapped persons who cannot obtain home loans through other channels.

Mobutu: rebels got inside help

Kinshasa, Zaire (UPI) — President Mobutu Sese Seko told his country Saturday rebels who invaded Shaba Province got help from high army traitors inside Zaire, but promised his government would triumph "as long as I will be alive."

Addressing 300,000 citizens who marched through Kinshasa as a demonstration of support, Mobutu said there was "completely up to the highest army level," the national news agency Azap reported.

As proof of the complicity, Mobutu said.

—The attack came at the time when fuel had been rationed in Kinshasa and Lubumbashi, capital of Shaba Province.

—To show its desire to live as good neighbors with Angola, Zaire had withdrawn its paratroops and tanks from Shaba, after Angolan authorities complained about their presence there. So at the time of the attack only about 100 gendarmes (state troopers) were in the area of the invasion.

—The invaders were kept informed of the Zairean army's radio messages. The system of message transmission has been changed and since the situation has clearly improved in favor of the Zairean forces, Mobutu said.

"One of the officers directly involved in the plot has already been arrested," he said.

Mobutu also said a Zairean journalist was the accomplice of a Cuban diplomat who was accused of espionage last week, which caused Zaire to suspend its diplomatic relations with Cuba.

But with Moroccan troops on their way to the battlefield to bolster the Zairean army, Mobutu said, "as long as I will be alive, we will win."

Azap said 1,500 Moroccan troops had been sent into Shaba Province to help the Zairean army. The news agency said more Moroccan forces would be sent if the situation requires.

Azap reported Mobutu also received an Egyptian military mission to discuss practical arrangements for possible Egyptian military assistance to Zaire. The agency said Egyptian troops might arrive in the next few days.

More trace 'roots'

By George Gallup
Princeton, N.J. — Spurred by the television series "Roots," Americans reveal great interest in tracing their family history.
As many as one-third of both whites and nonwhites say they are "very interested" in exploring their own family origins. Young adults (18-29 years old) reveal even greater interest in family genealogy than do older persons.
The current survey finds as many as 7 in 10 whites and 8 in 10 nonwhites saying they have read about, or watched at least part of, the televised series. "Roots" ABC's eight-segment series was based on Alex Haley's best-seller by the same name, which traces his family's African origins and slave background.
Further evidence of Americans' new interest in their family's past is seen also in the sharp increase in visitors to the genealogical sections of libraries, in the number of inquiries to companies that offer to trace one's family tree, the study of so-called ethnic languages in colleges and universities, and the new interest in travel to Africa.

Among the reasons cited for the current dramatic rise in interest in our origins are, in addition to the TV series, (1) the impact of the bicentennial, and (2) America's coming of age. (In Great Britain, a much older nation, the public has long displayed a great interest in genealogy.)
The rise in interest in tracing one's family origins is recorded at a time when considerable lack of knowledge is found regarding one's ancestry.
For example, 29% of Americans nationwide do not know what nation their father's ancestors came to America from. And 34% do not know whence their mother's family emigrated.
Furthermore, 7 in 10 people nationwide do not know in what year their father's (68%) or mother's (70%) ancestors came to America. Among nonwhites, the proportion is as high as 9 in 10.
The findings.

Sit back, let Autofarm do chores
(c) New York Times

Washington — A computerized agricultural system, called the Autofarm, was patented this week by a University of Pennsylvania electrical engineering professor.
Arthur D. Hall III was granted what he rightly termed a jumbo patent. Instead of the average seven pages, it comprises a total of 101 pages. And instead of the usual two clips in one edge, the document has a metal binder that holds the many sheets together.
Hall was assigned patent 4,015,366 to his company, Advanced Decision Handling, Inc., a telecommunications consulting concern that has offices in his home town, Port Deposit, Mo., and in Falls Church, Va.

Autofarm, which is not yet in physical existence, will use a small computer to receive information on soil moisture, nutrient level, pathological and other conditions, and send signals to a variety of controlled devices.
These devices are to control the flow of fluid materials to the fields, and the return flow of harvested products. The computer also will control multi-purpose robots for picking fruit, seeding, grading, pruning and other field and packing plant operations. It is further designed to manage an energy conservation and conversion system and do the farmer's planning and accounting on the side.
Autofarm's inventor feels that it will drastically increase production, conserve energy, reduce pollution and increase safety.

New Peace Corps emerging in 1970s

Washington (UPI) — The Peace Corps, an offspring of the New Frontier that enlisted American idealism to tackle the dirt, disease and deprivation of the world, appears ready to make a comeback after years of neglect.

The promise of adventure and subsistence wages offered by John F. Kennedy in 1961 attracted 66,000 volunteers overseas to 68 countries in 16 years.

But Vietnam dampened idealism in this country and suspicion grew around the world that the Peace Corps was just another extension of U.S. foreign policy, not a citizen-to-citizen assistance program as advertised.

Out of sight

Add to that a declining budget and a low-profile home in the ACTION volunteerism agency during the Republican years and the Peace Corps all but dropped out of sight.

But the Peace Corps may be coming back behind new support on Capitol Hill and — most significantly — in the White House. Mrs. Lillian Carter is the first member of the First Family to have served in the Peace Corps.

Within weeks of her son's inauguration, the President's buoyant 78-year-old mother took a side trip from funeral ceremonies for the president of India to return to the village in which she worked as a nurse in the 1960s.

The Carter administration already has asked for a 10% boost for the Peace Corps for fiscal year 1978. While the $75 million request still is the smallest in several years, officials promise "substantial changes in the detail of the budget" once the decline of the corps is reversed.

To head federal volunteer programs, Carter selected Sam Brown, a former antiwar activist and former Colorado state treasurer.

Reversal expected

I did not accept the President's request to head this agency (ACTION) in order to preside over the decline of the Peace Corps. Brown told a subcommittee of the House International Relations Committee.

I will manage the Peace Corps in such a way that the declines of recent years will be reversed and that the organization and mood of the Peace Corps will once again reflect the vitality of our ideals.

Key Democrats in Congress also favor revitalization of the Peace Corps.

Rep. Michael Harrington, D-Mass., chairman of a subcommittee overseeing Peace Corps operations, says Congress now has the chance to use the nation's unemployed "to fuel a new Peace Corps working on innovative projects directly with people in need around the world."

The agency was established by Kennedy's executive order in June 1961. By 1966, 16,000 volunteers were in the field financed by a $114 million budget. But support steadily declined as the Vietnam war took precedence over foreign spending.

Merged into ACTION

The Peace Corps had $102 million to work with the first year of the Nixon administration and $80 million the last year of the Ford administration.

Money was not the only assault on Peace Corps operations. The agency lost valued visibility when merged into ACTION with other volunteer programs in 1971.

The types of volunteers changed, too. The Nixon administration said underdeveloped countries wanted engineers to design bridges rather than eager but inexperienced young people to build them.

Volunteers were selected only for specific openings. Critics said sitting out large numbers of young college graduates drained much of the enthusiasm that characterized the early days.

By 1970, many volunteers openly were protesting the war applications had fallen off 58% and one third of the volunteers quit before the conclusion of two-year stints.

And just as the Nixon administration used federal agencies for political purposes, the Peace Corps was brushed by the Nixon reelection campaign.

To get itself out of this period of shadow, the Peace Corps asked the Aspen Institute to prepare a blueprint for reviving the original idealism of the agency.

It recommended a separate "public corporation" identity for the agency and assignment of Peace Corps volunteers to international organizations to blunt suspicion that U.S. foreign policy was the corps' long objective.

Brown has asked for time to revitalize the corps in his own way, before Congress acts on the recommendations of the outside consultant.

House hearings on the larger Peace Corps budget begin in late April.

What encourages Democrats to run in First District? No Charley Thone

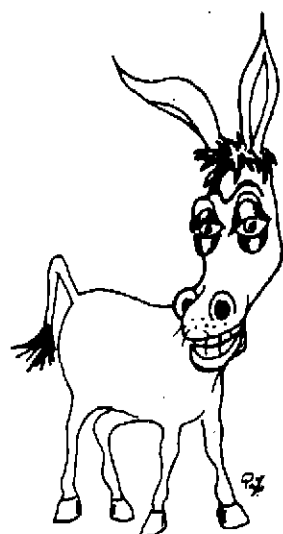

By Don Pieper
There are some hopeful Democrats in the First District this spring. Charley Thone may run for something besides reelection.

Republican Thone had nearly three times the votes of the last Democrat to challenge for his congressional seat. There wasn't a Democrat willing to challenge until a couple of days before the filing deadline.

But, with Thone apparently thinking of a 1978 campaign for something other than a fifth term in the House, Democrats are stirring.

Lancaster County Commissioner Bruce Hamilton hasn't started making Hamilton for Congress yard signs yet, but he's on the verge.

Hess Dyas, still scarred emotionally from last year's loss to Edward Zorinsky in the Democratic Senate primary, is recovering and willing once again to talk about a possible campaign.

Demo hopefuls page 2B

Allen O'Donnell, the political scientist from Wayne State College who defeated Gov. J. J. Exon's choice for Democratic national committeeman last year, has a congressional race under inactive consideration.

Don Geis, a Lincoln political operative whose biggest success was coordinating the Frank Church win over Jimmy Carter in Nebraska's presidential primary, acknowledges an occasional thought about Congress, but he says it's nothing serious.

He says he's about three or four on a 10-point decision scale.

Another Lincoln businessman, Bill Harris, says challenging the efficacy of Exon's economic policies, as he has with vigor, isn't a good way to get ahead in Nebraska Democratic politics. So, Harris says, he doesn't have any plans. Still, he admits, he does think every now and again about running.

Pauline Anderson, who carried the party banner last year, couldn't be reached to comment on the likelihood of another try — this time, maybe, against some Republican other than Thone. Associates say Mrs. Anderson isn't enthusiastic, but hasn't rejected the possibility, either.

There probably are other First District Democrats entertaining ideas, however faint, of succeeding Thone.

"It could be a big primary, a really big one, if Charley Thone doesn't run (for Congress) again," O'Donnell says.

"If Thone runs for governor or Senate," Hamilton says, "there could be as many as 15 Democrats in our primary."

This year, Thone holds the key to political aspirations of Nebraskans of both political persuasions. Republicans, too, are awaiting word from the Lincoln attorney, who says it is much too soon to make his choice among governor, senator, congressman or voluntary retirement.

Push for grain storage is stimulating bin sales

By Dominick Costello
Farm Editor

Federal efforts to encourage farmers to construct more on-farm grain storage facilities in order to establish a grain reserve have stimulated bin sales in Nebraska.

"New requests for loans are already coming in. I knew there was a shortage of storage, particularly in the areas where irrigation is being developed. Commercial storage isn't expanding fast enough to meet the need," said Harold Rademacher of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service (ASCS).

The federal government has long had a program to lend farmers money at a low interest rate — to build grain storage on their farms.

The revised program offered now has doubled the amount of money a farmer can borrow from $25,000 to $50,000. It also permits the farmer to include in his loan funds for grain-drying equipment, grain-handling equipment and the building's foundation.

The farmer must pay 7% interest for the duration of the loan and 13% of the total cost in cash above the amount borrowed.

Up to two years' grain crop capacity will be financed, depending on existing storage and a farm's grain growing ability. If you need a 10,000-bushel storage facility for two years but have 5,000 bushels of good bin space, you can borrow only for one additional 5,000-bushel bin.

The loan can cover up to 85% of all out-of-pocket costs, including hired labor to construct the bin, but not the borrower's own labor.

If the loan is above $25,000, the ASCS will ask for a lien against the land on which it is built as added security.

"We have had a lot of potential buyers sitting on the fence waiting for a better storage program," said Robert Watts of Lincoln, a salesman for the Butler Grain Bin Co. "I am sure it will generate some sales."

A Wahoo Building Co. spokesman predicted an increase in his firm's sales. "All bin companies have experienced a decline in sales the last two or three years," he said. "If (the new program) will help considerably."

Dennis Boesiger of Midwest Ag Builders Corp. at Beatrice says major bin demand comes in July. "Right now, farmers are more concerned about getting their grain in the ground," he said. "If it appears there will be a crop, you can be sure they will be planning for additional storage now."

Rademacher said Nebraska farmers have about 20 million bushels of wheat in storage under government loans, about half of it stored on farms. Another 50 million bushels of corn are under loan, with three-fourths of it stored on farms.

There are small quantities of sorghum, oats, barley and soybeans in storage in Nebraska under federal loan programs.

Rademacher estimated the government loan program has helped construct 270 million bushels of on-farm storage in Nebraska. This represents a substantial portion of the state's estimated 700 million to 800 million bushels of on-farm storage capacity.

"I expect to see about 50 million bushels added this year, with about half of that under our program and the rest from farmers own funds, borrowed from banks and other sources," he said.

The government's primary reason for increasing efforts to help farmers build new storage is to encourage farmer participation in the new grain reserve program.

The program allows farmers to extend their wheat loans for an additional year, with the government paying 20¢ a bushel on storage, providing the wheat was grown in 1976.

Temperature records snap as balmy weather prevails

Omaha recorded record-breaking temperatures, while summer-like conditions pushed thermometers upward across the state Saturday.

Omaha broke a 1930 record at 1:40 p.m. Saturday, as the day's high nudged 85 degrees, four points above the previous high.

Lincoln reported a high of 84 degrees, accompanied by blue skies and gusting southerly winds.

Valentine marked a record-breaking temperature at 88 degrees, while Norfolk, McCook and Chadron peaked at 87 degrees.

The National Weather Service predicted more unseasonably warm, but wonderful, temperatures for Easter, which would be slightly cooler than Saturday.

1970 WSU plane crash suits to be heard in June

Wichita, Kan. (UPI) — Suits to determine if the federal government was negligent in the 1970 crash of the Wichita State University (WSU) football team plane will be heard June 6 in U.S. district court.

The suits contend Federal Aviation Administration officials knew or should have known the plane was unsafe, but allowed it to be certified as airworthy.

Thirty-one of 40 passengers were killed Oct. 1, 1970, when a golden eagle aviation plane carrying the WSU football team, faculty and supporters smashed into a Colorado mountainside. The plane, enroute to a Utah State football game, crashed near Silver Plume, Colo.

The trial combines 17 lawsuits filed in several states against the federal government and other defendants including Jack Richards Aircraft Co. and Golden Eagle Aviation, Inc., of Oklahoma City. A total of $17 million in damages is sought.

U.S. District Judge Frank Theis has ruled that if the federal government is found liable in the case, it may try to prove responsibility for the negligence should be shifted to the State of Kansas and to Wichita State University, also parties to the case. They rejected Thursday motions that the state and WSU be excused from the action.

High hopes ride Fort Kearny trail

By Dean Terrill
Southeast Nebraska Bureau
Kearney — In the river stillness, it's easy to hear the creaking wagon trains, the ponies at full gallop and that first train proudly whistling across the Platte. And sometimes the echoing of an old Fort Kearny bugler.

The imagination knows no bounds when its camping companions are the frontiersmen of the Oregon Trail, the Mormon Trail and the Pony Express. Throw in a key segment of the first transcontinental telegraph line and that's some parcel of romance.

Hopefully it's all coming together as the "Fort Kearny trail," a unique 14-mile teaming of recreation and the historic. If a $10,000 fund drive is successful, the hiking and biking route will utilize two abandoned railroad bridges which themselves are part of history.

Negotiations have been underway several weeks with the Burlington Northern for a 1.7-mile stretch of right-of-way, which includes the bridges. The $10,000 sale price finally emerged after persistent efforts by the Fort Kearny Preservation, Restoration and Development Board.

Legislative proposal

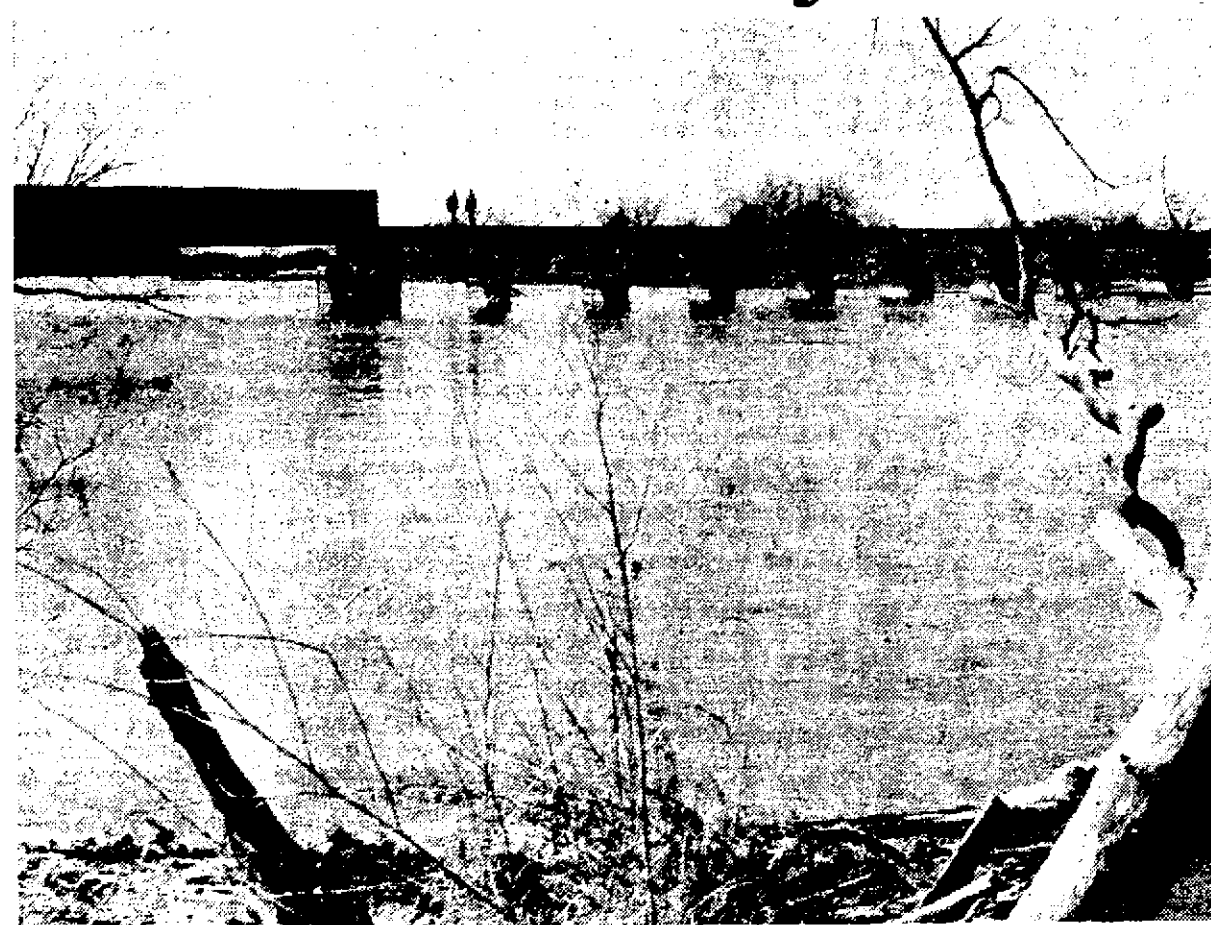

The cause, led by Minden attorney William H. Heier, who is board secretary, had focused on a legislative proposal (LB527) authorizing the State Game and Parks Commission to acquire the crossing site. Questions about public financing, however, shifted the thrust to a fund drive by boosters from Buffalo, Kearney, Phelps and Adams counties. The Kearney County treasurer at Minden is in charge of contributions.

"Being such a notable crossroads, this is one of the most historic spots in the United States and should be so honored," said Heier. "Imagine how exceedingly important it was to the military, for example, when the telegraph wire first crossed the river here and reached the fort."

The 1.7-mile crossing, just north of the Fort Kearny Recreation Area, is approximately a mile from Fort Kearny Historical Park and its stockade replica. Linked with the Bassway Strip paralleling Interstate 80 at the north end of the railcrossing, a hiking trail of some 14 miles is envisioned. It would terminate at the Windmill State Wayside Area near Gibbon.

Campgrounds

"The game commission is very enthusiastic about the potential of tying the various attractions together," said

Platte's first crossing site will hold romance as foot trail.

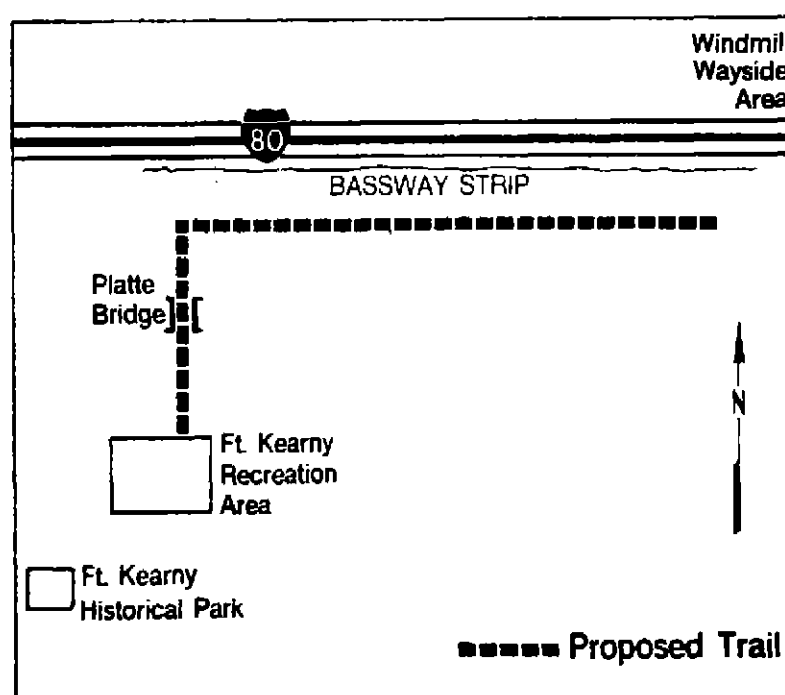

Roger Sykes, Fort Kearny superintendent. "Besides the great historical significance, the trail would provide good access to the Platte for canoers and wildlife observers. Hikers and bike riders could start either at the Interstate or the campgrounds and cover as many of the trail segments as they would like."

The commission estimates a $7,200 expenditure to provide protective hand rails and planking over the abandoned bridges. Presumably a light coating of asphalt would be applied to keep down undergrowth.

The bridges, one of 962 feet and the other 292, of course are not the full original spans. But they are on the exact site of the first land grant railroad to traverse the Platte.

According to Sen. Martin Kahle, of Kearney, sponsor of LB527, the Legislature hopefully will approve acquisition of the right-of-way now without the involved bill procedure. It is believed game commission ownership

Sparked by industry, Santee Reservation growth spreads like wildfire

Assembly lines like this are turning out some 10,000 thermometer kits weekly.

By Michael Holmes

Omaha Nebraska Bureau

Santee — Corporation after corporation turned them down. "Give Indians a factory to run?" the rejections seemed to hint. "Ridiculous."

The idea wasn't ridiculous to Becton-Dickinson and Co. (B-D), which now numbers among its 60 plants and laboratories worldwide one that is managed and staffed by Indians.

It wasn't ridiculous to the Santee Sioux Tribe, either, whose officials view the B-D plant here as an important factor in bringing Santee Indians home to the reservation's rolling hills.

B-D opened its Santee plant in August 1975. Today, the single initial product line has been increased to five, 27 of the 28 employees are Indian, and both the work force and output have grown faster than officials expected.

Population growth

On the reservation, the school where enrollment had dropped to nine by 1970 now counts 90-plus students. The reservation's population has grown from a low of 150 to about 400.

And more importantly, says B-D production supervisor and former tribal official Don LaPointe, "We've got people working here who never had a job in their lives. And they're some of our best employees."

Santee tribal officials became concerned about the reservation's dwindling population several years ago. LaPointe said.

To help combat the problem, they sought federal funds to develop an industrial site nine miles south of the village of Santee. Then, they sought industry for the site.

They contacted manufacturers in many states, LaPointe said, and B-D was one of two that were interested.

1971 beginning

One of the nation's largest producers of health care products, B-D began considering the Santee proposal in 1971, said Milt Romjue, industrial relations director at B-D's Columbus plant.

Romjue said several Santee had been working at the Columbus plant. The company headquarters in New Jersey was impressed with the Santee presentation and, in 1973, the decision to build was made.

Attracting the B-D facility was part of a two-pronged attack on the reservation's problems. The tribe also sought federal aid programs for its people.

Several programs were obtained for the reservation and have resulted in the building of a community center with library, tribal offices, medical clinic and day-care center.

Housing shortage

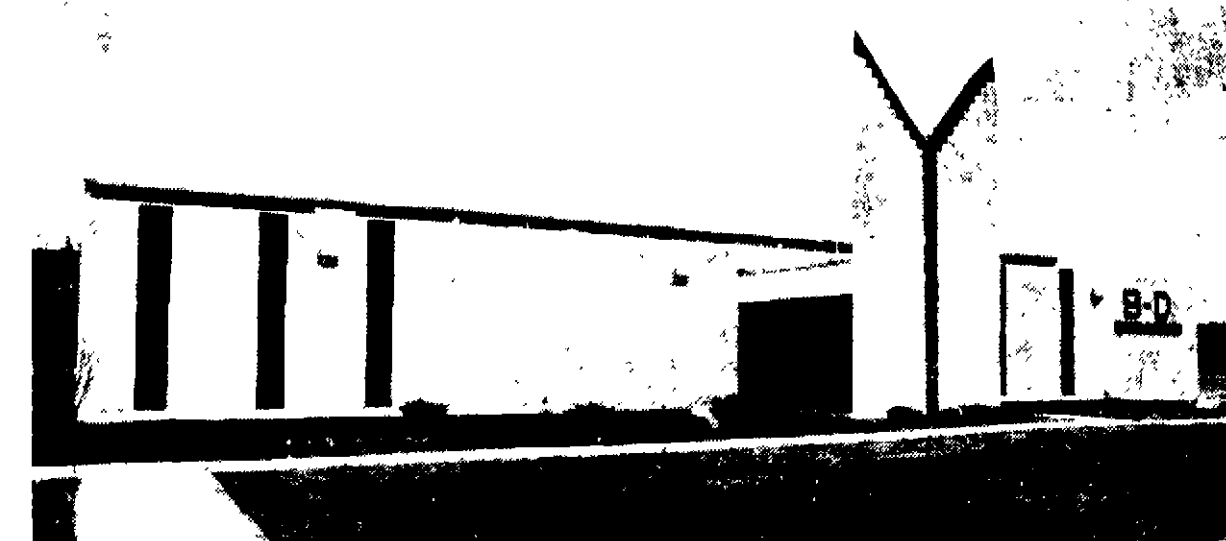

A shortage of housing also plagued the tribe. Sixty-six units of low-income housing were built, and more are being sought, said tribal business manager Ken Foner.

In addition, a new elementary school was built, a grocery opened and a recreation park established.

All this, and the jobs created by the B-D factory, has had encouraging effects, Foner said.

Families who went elsewhere to find jobs are coming back, he said. "If there

are jobs and decent housing, they want to come home."

When the B-D plant opened, it employed 12 persons. Today, that figure is 28 and LaPointe said it should continue to expand to about 60.

"It (the expansion) is going faster than I thought," he said some 20 months after the plant opened. "We pride ourselves in meeting deadlines and schedules. We can do it."

The plant originally assembled only thermometer kits. That operation continues, along with the assembly and packaging of syringes, medical pipettes and bandages.

Production

Shipping twice weekly across the nation, LaPointe said the plant is turning out nearly 50,000 of some products each week.

As for the reservation, Foner said more building is on tap.

Additional 10 units of housing for the elderly are under construction. The tribe has applied for 45 more (general) housing units, and virtually every house in Santee is occupied," he said.

The boom has made the Santee Reservation an example for other Indian tribes.

We've had representatives from other reservations come down and look at what we're doing," Foner noted.

More industry

"I've been invited to speak to economic development groups on other reservations," LaPointe added. "They're very interested in what we've accomplished."

The Santee industrial site can accommodate two more facilities similar to the 14,000-square-foot B-D plant, Foner said. And the tribe is looking.

"The (national) economic conditions recently haven't been that beneficial," he said. "But we've had some inquiries."

Reflecting on the initial difficulties in attracting industry to the reservation, LaPointe said, "I don't expect they had any dealings with Indian people before."

And when the plant opened, LaPointe said, "One hears talk Indians have never made industrial successes. Well, talk is cheap. I want to show people we can do it. This is one place that is going to make it."

As for Becton-Dickinson's view of the experiment, Romjue says, "The people are great. It's working out very well."

Democrats

Hess Dyas

Stones by Don Pieper

Hess Dyas says when he plays poker he goes for broke no matter what kind of hand he's been dealt.

"I see some similarity with the way I play politics," he says. "Frankly, my 'hands' haven't been that good before, but, boy, did I bet a bundle on them."

He's talking about "hands" he held in 1974, when he literally walked the First District during a well-financed campaign against Republican Charles Thone, and lost; and in 1976, when he crisscrossed the state in a motor home battling Edward Zorinsky for the Democratic Senate nomination, and lost.

"Now," Dyas says, "here I am with a better hand than I've ever held before. I've got to decide if I am willing to put up the stakes again and go at it."

Better "hand"

This "hand" is better because Thone apparently will be vacating the First District congressional seat, because Nebraskans demonstrated last year they are willing to elect Democrats to something beside governor, and because two campaigns have given Dyas an identity and a seasoned cadre of loyal supporters.

But those campaigns have left him with wounds, too — especially the one a year ago against Zorinsky.

"That was a helluva blow, financially, emotionally and physically. For a long, long time, I was pretty low," he says.

Even a few weeks ago, when Bruce Hamilton invited him to lunch to discuss Hamilton's congressional aspirations, "it was still almost agony to visit about politics."

But he says he has recovered. He will be active in someone's campaign in 1978, maybe his own.

He and his wife Carol have talked about another race. "But I still don't know where I am on that. Mainly, what I am doing is nothing," he says.

Only himself

He hasn't been canvassing other politicians or otherwise testing the market. "The decision really doesn't depend upon anybody but myself," Dyas says, and he doesn't intend to make it until deep into the fall.

Asked if he might run again for the Senate, he said, "Oh, my word, no. Tell Jim Exon to quit shaking." (The governor is expected to claim the Democratic Senate nomination.)

It'll be Congress or nothing, Dyas says.

"Sometimes I look back at that Senate race (last year) and have misgivings for even having run. As tough as I found Charles Thone to be in 1974 (Thone won 53%-47%), I have some regret that I didn't make another run at him," Dyas says.

"I know I could have given him a whale of a run in 1976."

Would he be more apt to decide to run in 1978 if Thone runs for something else?

"Yeah. But that's not to say I wouldn't run against him. I'm not one of those sitting on the edge of my chair waiting to see what Charley Thone is going to do.

"If I get to the place where I decide to run, it'll be because I think it's important and it wouldn't make any difference who else is in the race."

Work challenging

Dyas, a former state party executive director and paid chairman, says he has become "just a businessman on South 48th St." He is president of a firm making audio-visual programs for schools and other customers.

The work is challenging and exciting, he says, and he will have to think hard before leaving it for another fling at political office.

Furthermore, he says, as treasurer of the Nebraska Civil Liberties Union he is leading a drive to raise $18,000 to increase the budget for lawsuits.

"I'm really involved with that and it's very satisfying."

Although he still has some outstanding debts from the Senate campaign, Dyas says Zorinsky (the winner) is helping put together a fund-raising event for June which should balance the books.

"Money won't be a factor at all in the decision about running again," Dyas says.

Bruce Hamilton

Bruce Hamilton has run for Congress before. He says he did it to make a point. If he runs again next year, as he is likely to, it will be to win.

In 1968, while he still was in law school, he helped form what was called the New Party and was its nominee against Democrat Clair Callan and Republican Robert Denney.

"Some of us cared deeply about the war in Vietnam," Hamilton recalls, "but Callan and Denney were arguing over who deserved credit for the new Lincoln post office — and here was this war raging."

"We didn't think that was appropriate. We knew full well we wouldn't accomplish much else, but we wanted to make our point. It was an incredible failure in terms of votes (Denney 97,697, Callan 78,374, Hamilton 4,534), but I've never been sorry."

Learning experience

"I enjoyed it and it was very good experience. I learned a lot."

Among other things, he says he learned how big the First Congressional District is — 27 counties, South Dakota to Kansas, most of the eastern third of Nebraska.

If he starts touring it again in search of votes, it will be as a Democrat, not as a representative of a one-issue splinter party, and as an elected official (Lancaster County commissioner), not as a student.

"I'm probably in the most difficult stage of deciding," Hamilton says. "I'm addressing myself, trying to figure out if that (candidacy) is the kind of life I want to lead. The day I say formally that I am a candidate, my life will change. It'll be fishbowl personified."

Hamilton struggle

The longer Hamilton talks about his "struggle with himself," the closer he comes to saying he really has decided and is waiting only to see if someone can talk him out of it.

He has been talking with politicians (Gov. J. J. Exon, Sen. Edward Zorinsky, Rep. John Cavanaugh, Lt. Gov. Gerald Whelan, Democratic Chairman Dick White and potential primary foe Hess Dyas), family and close friends.

"I'm asking everybody to give me a darn good reason why I shouldn't run. Why not Bruce Hamilton? All I've heard so far are comments like, 'We'd hate to see you lose' and 'You're a long shot anyway and surely a long shot if Charley Thone runs for reelection.'"

"Those aren't convincing reasons to me," he says.

Hamilton says he isn't good at being "a pretend candidate, maybe." He'll know by May if he is going to run and he'll announce his decision, he says.

Hamilton says he can't wait for Dyas, Thone or anyone else to make up his mind. He says he realizes his name isn't a household word in the district. Even though he's run before, it was 10 years ago and he got fewer than 3% of the votes.

Job strength

He says he is strengthened as a potential candidate by his service on the Lancaster County Board.

"I'm really glad I got elected to this job. It gives me an insight into the real, day-to-day problems of government. I wouldn't call me a fiscal conservative, even now, but I have learned that you have to analyze everything in terms of cost."

"Every dollar you decide to spend for something could have been used for something else nearly as important," he says.

Hamilton believes government is "an important element in the process of uplifting and helping people reach their potential. But I realize that if you're perceived as just a rabble rouser and interested only in a certain element of society, you can't solve problems. You have to bring people together to solve problems, not separate them."

Statehouse

Letter

By Don Pieper

What the bottom line leads to

It's income tax time. Nebraskans working on their tax returns are realizing how much of what they earn winds up in the state treasury. And then comes this jarring word from the Statehouse. It's not enough. Tax revenue isn't meeting projections. Not enough? It's too much!

At least it seems that way to Nebraskans looking at the bottom line of their own tax returns. How could numbers like those be too small to satisfy state government?

For some, those numbers mean the difference between a vacation trip or staying home, between painting the house this summer or letting it go another year, between steak and hamburger.

And for what is the taxpayer sacrificing? What, for heaven's sake, has state government done for him lately?

Low, low, low — too low

Well, for one thing, it has tried to keep tax rates as low as possible. And it turns out they may be too low to cover the expenses.

The expenses? Things like a university, a highway program, training for the mentally retarded, inspections of grocery scales, a Workmen's Compensation Court, environmental control, drivers licenses, water resource management. Nothing special.

Just aid to provide nursing care for the elderly, assist with airport improvement projects, subsidize local school operations, relieve property taxes.

More than half of what state government collects it sends back to local governments in one form of aid or another.

State government uses all it gets — and, this year, maybe more.

Too much.

Probably it is too much. The governor says so. Legislators say so. They both made cuts in what was requested for expenditure during the current fiscal period. Still, what was authorized apparently is costing more than the current tax rates can handle.

Expenditures talked about for the next fiscal year (July 1 is the fiscal New Year's Day) also may take more than those rates will produce. Both the governor and legislators pledge to avoid raising the rates. They know Nebraskans are looking at those tax returns.

It ain't easy, folks

But cutting budgets isn't easy. Taxpayers know. It means staying home instead of having a vacation trip, letting the old paint job go through another winter, eating hamburger.

In state budget terms, it may mean fewer custodians for the Capitol, no special University of Nebraska funds to collect folklore materials, less aid to the technical community colleges than they consider minimum.

Cuts are made. Still the budgets climb each year. The numbers get larger on the tax returns.

• Sen. Keith Boughn of Norfolk submitted, then withdrew, an amendment to include toilet paper among items to be taxed for an anti-litter campaign.

Allen O'Donnell

Sure, Allen O'Donnell says, he's thought about running for Congress.

"It's wonderful thinking about it," he says, "but I have to keep coming back down to earth. After all, I've got five children."

O'Donnell has been a Nebraskan only since 1971 (when he began teaching political science at Wayne State College), but he has hustled into prominence in the state's Democratic party.

Last summer, he was elected national committeeman and now he is flirting with the possibility of a congressional campaign.

Is he vulnerable to a carpet-bagger charge? "We'll have to find out. If I get really serious, I'll check on that with some of the state's leading Democrats," he says.

Air Force balance

Traditionally, it hasn't helped a politician to be an educator. O'Donnell says he knows that, but he thinks his 20-year career in the Air Force balances that.

"The only way to know for sure will be to get out and meet the people and see what they think," he says.

O'Donnell in many respects isn't the ordinary potential candidate. He is a high school dropout who joined the Air Force at age 16. He retains a trace of accent from his New York City boyhood.

While in the Air Force (retiring as a senior master sergeant), he earned bachelor's and master's degrees. He is working on the thesis for his doctorate.

"When I left the service, I wasn't all that interested in politics," he says. "I was interested in teaching. But my first job was in an Office of Equal Opportunity special program in southern California training hardcore unemployed, drug addicts and alcoholics."

Kennedy campaign

"I found out there is an awful lot about government that somebody is doing wrong."

O'Donnell says he got involved in the Robert F. Kennedy presidential campaign because "he seemed to have some of the answers."

His own political philosophy, O'Donnell says, is based on pragmatism.

"Idealism is great, but it doesn't put food on the table. We must do what will work, what people accept, what they will allow. I don't see any other way for our free system to work," he says.

Would the First Congressional District accept a Democrat in 1978?

"If the candidate the Democrats put up is good and works hard, sure he can win," O'Donnell, the political scientist, says. "It comes down to human terms. The party registration difference isn't that great anymore and there is a heavy enough swing of Republicans willing to vote for Democrats to make it possible."

Demos can win

The chances were improved, he says, by the election of Democrats Edward Zorinsky and John Cavanaugh to the Senate and House in 1976.

"That's taught Democrats they can win," he says.

As for whether he will be one of the Democrats trying to win something next year, O'Donnell says he is approaching the problem like an old (45) professor. "It's too important for a quick decision. I probably will be next January before I know."

If you live in the Near South neighborhood, grab a broom.

The neighborhood association is sponsoring a spring cleanup Saturday beginning at 9 a.m.

City trucks will canvass the area bounded by 13th, 27th, South and G Sts., picking up whatever throwaways residents pile at the curb.

Volunteers from the Near South Neighborhood Assn. (NSNA) will attend the trucks, which will be driven by city drivers.

Seymour dies

New Haven, Conn. (AP) — Charles Seymour Jr., 65, a Yale University art history professor and authority on Italian Renaissance art, died Thursday at Yale-New Haven Hospital after a long illness.

HUD curtails Community Development

Persons living outside the seven Community Development (CD) target areas will not be allowed to participate in four CD programs after Aug. 1, and their participation until then will be curtailed.

The programs affected are abandoned buildings, tool loan, crisis intervention and home-improvement classes offered through the community college.

A memorandum from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), which funds the block grant programs, told the city's Urban Development Dept. that the programs should be confined to residents in the target areas.

The target areas, which were designated by the Community Development Task Force in 1975, are Havelock, Clinton, Malone, West Lincoln, Near South, University Place and South Salt Creek.

According to Tom Ekvall, director of the neighborhood assistance bureau, participation from outside the target areas will be allowed for the remainder of this fiscal year, but will be kept to only about 15% of the total participation.

One program, crisis intervention, which provides emergency assistance for home repairs, probably will not be able to accept any more applications from outside the target areas because there already is too much high outside participation, Ekvall said.

Outside participation in that program has run as high as 50%, he said.

In the other programs, participation from outside the target areas was only about 15% of the total, he said.

Apparently, the HUD ruling came after its Philadelphia regional office requested a clarification of block grant program policy. It is not a direct result of administration of the program in Lincoln, Ekvall said.

A keel to be laid — so what?

Washington (AP) — Falling in step with President Carter's no-frills policy, the Navy's new civilian boss is ending most traditional warship keel-laying ceremonies.

Claytor Jr. said the keel-laying "is usually the least significant" of the traditional milestones in a ship's construction and the ceremony is not worth the cost.

Burlington tracks

The rest of the Burlington trackage, once a thriving stretch of more than 20 miles from Kenesaw to Kearney, appears destined for sale to adjoining landowners. The railroad has indicated it would like a trustee to handle the individual sales.

The segment gradually deteriorated after the building of the Kenesaw cutoff to Oxford. For several years there was alternating daily one-way service between Kenesaw and Kearney, the branch finally shutting down about two years ago.

Financing of the trail, incidentally, will mark the third conveyance of fort-related property to the state by area boosters. Meier recalled that they first deeded the fort headquarters site, since expanded, then the county-owned sandpit which was developed into the campgrounds.

"Our board's own resources currently are less than $500, but more than $2,000 was pledged at a first meeting on the project," he said. "You can bet this area will come through again."

Whittier changes to be topic

Implementation of changes at Whittier Junior High School, 2200 Vine, will be discussed at 8 a.m. Tuesday by the Lincoln Board of Education in the Public School Administration Building at 720 So. 22nd.

Scheduled for about 9 a.m. is a report from Supt. John Prasch on division of Whittier students next fall among Lincoln High School at 22nd & J (ninth graders only), Culler Junior High at 5201 Vine and Lefler Junior High at 1100 So. 48th. Junior high principals have been talking to students who will be affected by the change, and making plans for the transition.

Relocation of the Lincoln Learning Center to Whittier will be discussed. The Learning Center began in 1971 in surplus wartime buildings at 2931 No. 40th. It was created for students who have difficulties in regular high schools.

Prasch also will report on the future of Southeast Community College use of part of the Whittier building, and on long-range plans with the University of Nebraska-Lincoln to house a performing arts academy there.

A status report on school reading programs, review of special education planning and negotiations with employees, and initial indications of 1977-78 staffing needs are among other items on the agenda.

Tabitha condominium complex to emphasize jobs for residents

A condominium planned for the "Autumn Woods," area of Tabitha New Community, on North 27th St. may answer the questions: how important is meaningful employment for retired people and how successful can such a program be?

Carroll Thompson, who plans to build the 41-unit, $1 million-plus condominium this year, says employment will be a key element in programming for the condominium.

As part of the Tabitha New Community, the condominium will offer health care monitoring and early detection clinics, a social program, a security system, recreation activities, garden space and transportation assistance.

Tabitha will be operating an employment service for residents of the New Community. They will be offering every job in the development to residents first," Thompson said. An employment counseling program also will operate in the condominium for those seeking jobs in Lincoln.

Thompson said "Meaningful work is not needed or desired by every retired person, but a large percentage whom we have interviewed told us that they want to work. Some will work to supplement their income, others just to maintain mental and physical vigor. The important thing is having work which allows a person to be needed and to know they are worthwhile."

The condominium will be a three-story brick building, with 24 one-bedroom and 17 two-bedroom units. Thompson said he is selling units and hopes to start construction this spring.

"We're calling it 'The Enterprise,'" he said. "The name signifies the concept that retirement is a career in itself and should be approached as a new enterprise with all the promise and adventure potential of other major undertakings in life."

Nebraska Resources

By Harold Simmons

Water defies ownership

Mother nature isn't paying much attention to the Nebraska Supreme Court.

Many years ago, the high court ruled that diverting water from one river basin to another was prohibited. Therefore, it held that Adams County couldn't be part of the Central Nebraska (Tri-County) Public Power & Irrigation District project to receive surface irrigation water.

But time and the geologic and hydrologic facts of life have changed that.

Surface irrigation water brought into Gosper, Phelps and Kearney Counties by Tri-County has recharged underground water supplies. Water tables have risen as much as 90 feet there.

Defies court

As the underground water level rose vertically, it also moved horizontally. And in complete defiance of the Nebraska Supreme Court, the water moved underground into other river basins.

A count of registered wells by the University of Nebraska Conservation and Survey Division shows that over 600 wells outside the river basin served by Tri-County are pumping water provided at least in part by the project.

Those 600-plus wells are irrigating over 60,000 acres, which is about half the acreage receiving surface water from the Tri-County project.

Among the beneficiaries from the project is Adams County, which the court said couldn't participate in the project. Adams County has 337 wells irrigating over 33,000 acres with underground water supplied by, or replenished by, the Tri-County project.

Complexities seen

These facts illustrate some of the complexities involved in attempting to decide who "owns" water, particularly underground water, and how that water should be used.

Some of the water delivered to central Nebraska originates in Wyoming, entering the state via the North Platte River. Some of the water diverted for irrigators and others, both in Wyoming and Nebraska, eventually winds up in Lake McConaughy.

Tri-County diverts the water to its project and other users. But a lot of the water seeps into the ground, with some of it flowing into other river basins.

Irrigators in other river basins pump the water for their own use. What they don't use consumptively, flows into basins such as the Blue and Republican Rivers, where it is diverted again before some of it continues on into Kansas.

No easy solution

This water usage chain illustrates why water experts maintain there isn't any easy solution to water problems. Any action affecting one part of the chain has impact farther down the chain.

It also illustrates how man, with blanket use of surface water and massive pumping of underground water, has accelerated the interrelationship of surface and underground water.

In the normal hydrologic cycle, the interrelationship often is not obvious. But today, pump irrigators can quickly reduce the flow of water in a stream that serves surface irrigators.

Compounding the problem of finding water solutions is the fact water usage was developed without any type of overall plan. It's been talked about for many years, but it's never become reality.

And adding to the difficulties is the fact that Nebraska water law is something of a hodgepodge — with some glaring blank spaces — that strains even the best legal minds, let alone the layman's.

New technology, strategy will be business topic

Omaha (AP) — New marketing strategies and technological advances for minority businesses will be discussed next month at a Mid-City Business and Professional Assn. seminar.

The Midwest Minority Businessmen seminar will be May 20-21 at the University of Nebraska at Omaha College of Business Administration.

About 150 persons from the Midlands are expected to attend. The seminar is one of five in the country being sponsored by the National Business League through its local chapters, said Alfred B. Grice, executive director of Mid-City.

Problems between minority vendors and purchasing agents from major corporations also will be discussed, Grice said.

Mid-City was founded in 1948 by a group of black businessmen in North Omaha.

Dole pushes price supports for wheat

Washington (UPI) — Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., said Saturday he will urge that the support price for wheat be raised to about $3 a bushel, even though that is too low.

"A target price of $3 for the 1977 crop will not even be adequate to meet the cost of production," Dole said in a statement released by his Washington office.

"But given the administration's opposition to any target price increase on the 1977 crop, a $3 level in within the range of what can reasonably be expected to pass the House and Senate and be enacted into law," Dole said.

The current target price is $2.47, and the House Agriculture Committee has recommended that it be raised to $2.90 for this year's crop.

Administration proposals for a new farm bill call for no increase in the support price this year and for a maximum of $2.60 per bushel in the future.

NU offense makes Osborne unhappy; defense shines

By Virgil Parker
Sports Editor

Last week's Nebraska football scrimmage was postponed because of a snowstorm. Saturday's head-knocking session was staged under a blazing sun. The weatherman said it was 85 degrees. It was hotter than that on the AstroTurf of Memorial Stadium.

After the drill, Cornhusker coach Tom Osborne was also hot — under the collar. "That's the worst offensive scrimmage we've had in a long, long time," Osborne observed after the top two units failed to score a touchdown.

"There's no use beating around the bush about it," the Big Red boss added. "It was lousy."

The offense started with the ball on its own 30 or 35-yard line. When a drive faltered by failing to make a first down, they'd go back and start again.

The first and second strings — while facing comparable defenses — initiated 17 series. Only five of the 17 times did the offense move the ball across midfield, despite starting just 15 or 20 yards away.

Four of the five times didn't get far into the defense's territory, gaining the opposing 41, 46, 40, and 38.

The longest sustained march by the top offensive units reached the defensive 21-yard line. Runs of six and 51 yards by fullback Dodie Donnell, a 21-yard scamper by I-back Isaiah Hipp and a seven-yard pass from quarterback Tom Sorley to split end Rocky Loken covered most of the ground.

But, a motion penalty created a second-and-eight situation from which the offense couldn't recover.

"The defense showed a considerable improvement over last Monday's first scrimmage," Osborne noted. "The offense certainly didn't. They were a tremendous disappointment. We've (the offense) got a long way to go. They just got whipped, man on man. They've got to buckle down and start blocking and running. Frankly, I was burned up."

Osborne expressed pleasure in the showing by the defense, which he admits was a concern after the graduation of many key performers.

With a 20-30 mph wind whipping through the stadium, the passing statistics were less than spectacular. Starting quarterback Randy Garcia completed just two of eight tries for 23 yards, while Sorley was eight of 16 for 94, and had one intercepted.

"The wind was probably a factor," Osborne admitted, "but we didn't throw and catch the ball as well as we should. We're struggling with our receivers." Loken led those from the top units with three catches for 25 yards.

The third and fourth units salvaged the day for the offense. I-back Greg Suelter tallied two touchdowns on runs of six and 28 yards and quarterback Brad Humphrey found split end Mike Hanika open on a 27-yard TD toss.

The all-out, aggressive defense installed this spring by defensive coordinator Lance Van Zandt was certainly evident.

Twice the safety was involved in the tackle at the line of scrimmage on third down and short yardage situations. The offense was guilty of six fumbles, many caused by hard tackling. Twelve running plays were stopped behind the line of scrimmage and the quarterbacks were sacked for a loss on 15 other occasions. Tim Fischer picked off two passes, one thrown by Sorley, another by Tim Hager. "Don't call it my defense, it's ours," Van Zandt said, referring to the entire defensive coaching staff.

April 10, 1977

"I was pleased with the way the kids played. They showed improvement — but that's what we practice for," he added. "The effort and attitude was good. There was a lot of enthusiasm for making the big play."

Van Zandt credited "less indecision" for the better showing. "We need to react on instinct. If a player has to think, 'If he does this, then I'll do that,' it's too late. A defensive player has to get rid of the block quickly and move to the ball carrier. They weren't doing that fast enough in the first scrimmage."

Van Zandt has a pet saying which sums it up. "You've got to give a frantic effort to be a good defensive player."

"That's what we talk about all the time," he added. "A frantic effort. But, don't get me wrong. We made a lot of errors on defense today. But, we can correct those through coaching if the players are giving a good effort."

Nine players missed the scrimmage because of a variety of what Osborne called "minor" injuries. Those from the top two units included defensive tackle Rod Horn, defensive backs Rene Anderson and Pat Lehigh, split end Tim Smith and offensive tackle Mark Goodspeed. All but Lehigh (hip pointer) are expected back in uniform by the first of the week.

Only one serious injury marred the scrimmage. Middle guard Oudious Lee dislocated a bone in his wrist — the same injury I-back Monte Anthony suffered last year — and is likely to miss the rest of the spring drills.

I-back Richard Berns retired with a charley horse after carrying the ball just twice.

The Huskers will practice Monday, Wednesday and Friday this week with another fullscale scrimmage scheduled Saturday. Three more weeks of spring practice remain, with the annual Red-White intrasquad game set for Sat., April 30.

'OK coach, I'm ready to go'

Editor's note: Guideposts Magazine sponsored an essay contest in which the student would recount a "moving or memorable experience of faith." Jon Kopetzky of Falls City Sacred Heart High School won a $500 scholarship with his essay about the death of his brother, Steve. Jon is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Bill Kopetzky. The essay is reprinted below with permission from Guideposts Magazine.

The time was October 11, 1974. Football was an important part of our school life and our Friday night game was almost over. We led our opponents 22-8. I was second string safety, and my brother, Steve, was playing defensive halfback on the varsity.

Nebraska's unpredictable weather, in mid-October, had changed from a sunny afternoon, to clouds of billowing fog that gradually enveloped the playing field, giving an eerie atmosphere to the contest.

My attention shifted from the game's action to the sidelines as I saw Steve limping off the field. I realized he had muscle cramps in his legs. After a few minutes of massage by the trainer, Steve was determined to return to the game. I heard his prophetic words, "OK Coach, I'm ready to go" as he eagerly returned to the lineup.

I saw Steve come up from his position to land a crushing tackle to stop a sure touchdown. I was always proud of the way he tackled — head straight and always tackling low. After the play was over, I noticed a player down on the field. Somebody said that it was Steve. I said to myself that it was only leg cramps again. I stared intensely as Steve was engulfed by coaches and trainers.

Over the public address came a call for my parents. I sank to my knees. Something was wrong. Another call, this time for the rescue squad — he needed oxygen. I started to shake. Steve can't be hurt.

A hushed silence came over the stadium as the spectators seemed to sense instinctively that the injury was grave. Minutes were like hours as they worked with Steve.

Again the P.A. announcement — a call for the ambulance and a request that no one leave the field in order not to block the access roads. No one moved. The seriousness of the situation was evident. The game was called.

Through the thickening fog, the muffled voices drifted onto the field as the fans began praying. "Our Father Who art in heaven, Hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done." It brought comfort.

The players were told to go to the locker rooms. It was hard for me to leave the field with my brother lying there unconscious.

How I admired Steve! As football players go, he was small, but what he lacked in stature, he overcame with determination and enthusiasm. He had accomplished so much apart from football. He wore the Eagle Scout badge with pride; he was a licensed swim instructor and a certified pool manager; a master of the baritone horn and bass guitar.

Perhaps his proudest accomplishment came when he was rated the Oratorical Champion for the State of Nebraska for two successive years. This year would be his last try for the National Championship. Twice he attended the American Academy of Achievement. Steve loved life and lived it with great exuberance.

Watson, Crenshaw into Masters lead

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — Tom Watson, grimly determined to avoid the collapses that have tormented him in his last two starts, rammed in a birdie putt on the final hole and tied dynamic Ben Crenshaw for the third-round lead Saturday in the 41st Masters golf tournament.

Watson's downhill, five-foot effort on the two-tiered 18th green finished off a round of 70 and gave him a three-round total of 209, seven under the grudging par on the famed Augusta National Golf Club course.

Crenshaw, who typifies the power and pride of the youth movement that has swept the tour this season, muscled his way to a 69 — talking to the ball in flight, twisting his stocky frame in body English, dancing in delight when a go-ahead putt dropped, visible agonizing when another putt missed.

The man they call "Gentle Ben" and the red-haired, freckle-faced Watson, winner of two titles and a leading $135,000 in winnings this season, shared a one-shot advantage over Rik Massengale going into Sunday's final round of this, the first of the year's four major tournaments.

Massengale bolted into his high position with a five-under par 67 that put him at 210.

Jack Nicklaus, the famed and feared Golden Bear who has won this prestigious tournament a record five times, shook off his putting woes with a 69 that left him very much in contention at 212.

"It was pretty much a reverse from the first couple of days," said Nicklaus, who has finished second twice here, hasn't been worse than fourth in six years and holds a record 14 major professional championships.

"I didn't play nearly as well as the first two days, but I putted a lot better," he said. "That's encouraging going into the last round. I think I can get to hitting the ball well again and if I can keep the putter going I've got a chance to do something."

He was tied with Jim Colbert, who had a 69 in the sunny, warm spring weather.

The group at 213, only four strokes back and very much in the race for the famed green jacket that goes to the winner, included Hubert Green, South African veteran Gary Player, Tom Kite and 44-year-old Rod Funseth, who shared the second round lead with Watson.

Funseth went to a 74. Player, the only foreign winner this tournament has produced, had to come back from a crippling double bogey to shoot 72. Green also had a 72 and Kite moved up with a 70.

"It ought to be a good turkey shoot tomorrow," said Green. "That's what the game is all about."

"It'll take a good score to win," said Kite, a one-time teammate of both Crenshaw and Massengale in their college days at the University of Texas.

There aren't many guys up there at the top that have a habit of gagging."

Defending champion Ray Floyd, with a 71, and Hale Irwin, with a 70, were in a group at 214.

Tom Weiskopf, the unhappy holder of a record four runner-up Masters finishes, once was in the middle of the hunt. He was one of six men — Funseth, Watson, Crenshaw, Green and Massengale were the others — who led or shared the lead at one time or another in the multiple-man scramble through the Georgia piney woods.

Injury-hampered U.S. Open champion Jerry Pate, still bothered by hand, neck and shoulder problems, got into the chase, but dropped back with a double bogey from a bunker on the 18th. He had a 74-216.

Slump-ridden Johnny Miller revived with a 69 that left him tied with Arnold Palmer, still the gallery favorite, at 218. Palmer shot a 71. PGA champ Dave Stockton was far back at 220.

Watson almost certainly is the outstanding player of the season and would be a run-away choice but for the problems with his swing that have cost him titles in his last two starts. In each, he's had a lead in the stretch run.

Wildlife work brings Petska top J-S honor

By Tom Vint
Outdoor Editor

Ord — Ken Petska stands a little taller than most men. No matter. Wildlife and people who have a strong interest in wildlife would look up to him anyway.

Petska is a rancher and farmer by trade. When he's not putting around on the farm north of here, he's getting involved for wildlife.

For his efforts, Ken Petska has been named the winner of the Sunday Journal and Star's Howard L. Wieggers Award as Nebraska's Outstanding Conservationist for 1977, in cooperation with the University of Nebraska Wildlife Club.

It is the second year the annual award will be given in honor of Weigers, a UNL professor who founded most of the wildlife study at UNL. Wieggers also acts as Nebraska Wildlife Club faculty advisor. It is the 12th such award given to outstanding conservation work in the state.

Petska is not one to claim any glory. He says he isn't the one who does most of the work for wildlife in the Ord area. He'd rather have the credit go to others. But it was the "others" who compiled a stack of endorsing letters in Petska's behalf.

"Mr. Petska became sincerely interested in the conservation of Nebraska's wildlife resources about ten years ago," wrote G. H. "Woody" Woodgate, the man who nominated Petska for the award. "Since that time he has held numerous positions in several organizations dedicated to wildlife conservation."

For starters, Petska is past president of the Nebraska Council of Sportsman's Clubs. He's now a director at large. He's been the local chairman of the Ducks Unlimited Chapter in Ord, a group raising $2,497 and $3,180 the past two years for waterfowl.

Petska was one of the founders of Ord's Karp and Krow Club, he's a director of the Nebraska Fur Takers Assn., and holds memberships in the Nebraska Trap Shooters Assn., the National Rifle Assn., the Loup Valley Muzzle Loaders Club and the Citizens for Wetlands organization. He's also a certified hunter safety instructor, avid hunter, trapper and fishes whenever he gets a chance.

When he has a little more extra time, Petska's wife Dorrita keeps waving goodbye because he's off speaking at the local Rotary Club, the Presbyterian Men's Group, at the St. Mary's Athletic Banquet, on NTV, anywhere he can get people to listen about wildlife.

The Valley County living snowfence program was one of Ken Petska's brainchildren for wildlife habitat. Here he surveys young trees along a stretch of snowfence.

"People will do something if other people talk to them so they can understand the trouble areas," Petska said. As evidence, he can lean back on the Valley County "living snowfence program," a brainchild of you-know-who.

"I like to plant ideas," said Petska. "I thought about this snowfence thing and a friend told me to go tell the board of the Lower Loup Natural Resource District. I went in to talk to them and they were just great. They programmed $12,000 for it and off we went."

As Petska explained it, the NRD and the county cooperate with the landowner to plant rows of pine and plum thickets through a 100-foot-wide grassed area. The landowner provides the land, the NRD fences it off for him, the county plants it and tends it and the Soil Conservation Service oversees and assists where possible.

"Where else are you going to find three such agencies working together to get a project done?" asks Petska. "We think the work they're doing is great."

Thus far, some 10 miles of the living snowfence has gone in through the area. In a matter of years, they should be providing valuable habitat for wildlife, not to mention providing the snowfence value to the surrounding land.

Petska's friends indicate he has done a good deal of personal habitat planting, has helped build and put up wood duck houses on his place and others, helped push through LB861's habitat bill and has participated in the state's pheasant stocking operation.

"I'll tell you one thing that has done some real good around here and that's the pheasant stocking operation," Petska said. "After a landowner or his kids take the time to raise 100, 200 or more pheasant chicks for seven or eight

I May Be Wrong

Trip to Cuba

Jeff Nannen doesn't feel like a pioneer or history-maker. He shrugs off the importance of the role he played this past week in the possible improvement of relations between the United States and Cuba.

Nannen, a freshman at the University of South Dakota, was a Sunday Journal and Star all-state basketball player at Syracuse High last year. He also won a Gold Medal at the State track meet in the high jump.

Nannen won the starting job as the center of South Dakota's basketball team this winter. Last week, South Dakota's starting unit combined with the first team from South Dakota State to form a team to travel to Havana for two games against a Cuban all-star team.

The players and coaches, along with an entourage of government officials and press, became the first American tourists to Cuba in 17 years.

Friendly reception

"We (the players) didn't feel there were any political overtones to the trip," Nannen said after his return late Friday night. "The people there were very nice and friendly to us. We just had a lot of fun and played a couple of basketball games."

The chartered plane which left South Dakota with the players and coaches, stopped in Washington to pick up the press. They weren't sportswriters, but political scribes.

"Probably a third of the plane was filled with press," Nannen recalls. "They probably wanted to take the trip to see the conditions of the country and get a first-hand impression of what is going on down there."

The movement of the American group was controlled, however.

"They housed us in a hotel about a half an hour outside of Havana," Jeff reports. "It was a new and modern building right on the beach. We had a lot of fun playing in the sand, body surfing and looking for shells. The weather was in the mid-80s."

That was a far cry from the cold weather the Americans left behind a week ago. Seemingly, they brought Cuba's good climate back with them.

"They had a couple of tours of the city for us," Nannen says. "but we had to stay together in a group. Lots of building activity was evident-particularly the construction of new apartment buildings."

The games were played in a 15,000 seat air-conditioned arena.

"There was no admission charge and it was full both nights," Jeff reports. "The crowd was cordial and gave us a good reception."

The opposing all-stars weren't so cordial. The Cubans won both games by identical 19-point margins.

"They had an average age of 23 years and their shortest guy was 6-2," Nannen says. "They were not only a little bigger and more experienced, but they could really leap. And they were good outside shooters."

Nannen's South Dakota quintet and the SDS team alternated every five minutes.

"That hurt us some too," he feels. "About the time you'd get the rhythm of the game it would be time to come out."

The American players were given a Cuban flag with the country's basketball federation seal on one side at the first game.

"The second night they gave us a plaque with a lot of Spanish writing on it," he said, while admitting he doesn't know exactly what it says.

Hang on to it, Jeff. As one of the first visitors to Cuba in 17 years, it'll make a nice memento to show your grandchildren some day.

Kansas stops KS in twinbill

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) — Kansas catcher Andy Gilmore knocked in a run in each of a set of doubleheader games Friday to defeat Kansas State 5-1 and 4-1 in Big Eight baseball play.

Gilmore hit paydirt in the third inning of each game. In the first match, his run-scoring triple followed Lee Ice's ground rule double and broke open a 11 tie.

Pitcher Brian Rhodes picked up his first victory of the season for Kansas.

In the second face-off, the score was deadlocked at a 1-1 tie in the third when Kansas stole two of its game-total four bases. Then Gilmore and Brian Moyer both knocked in runs, clinching the win.

The two teams will meet for a rematch here Monday in a doubleheader.

A great experience

If you haven't already read Jon Kopetsky's moving account about the death of his brother Steve on page one of the sports section, don't put down your Easter Sunday paper until you do.

A lot has changed for young Jon, who was just a sophomore when he watched the fatal football injury to the closest of his four brothers.

"You always look up to the next oldest," Jon says of his relationship with Steve. "I patterned everything I did in line with what Steve did. The whole family was very close-knit, but since my two oldest brothers were away at college, Steve and I were a little closer at the time."

In retrospect, Jon terms the accidental death of his brother "a great experience. Probably the greatest single experience one will ever have in a lifetime."

"I truly mean that," Jon offers. "Before, death was something you didn't even want to think about. I was always very hesitant to talk about it. It really scares the average person."

"Why shouldn't it?" he asks. "Nobody knows for certain what to expect from it. Nobody has been there and come back to tell about it. But, depending on how you look at it, it's really a blessing. You just have to have religious background and faith that there is life after death."

Like most people who have lost someone close to them, Jon cried at the funeral. But he had mixed emotions about why he was crying. He thought it was probably because he'd never see Steve again.

Bishop Flavin's reference

"It was then that I started to realize that death really is not bad," Jon says, "when Bishop Flavin made reference to the shepherd taking the best lamb to the side while the rest follow to a higher pasture."

"I don't know where he got that, out of what verse, but it stands out as the one phrase that really means a lot in my life," Jon adds. "It's by far one of the greatest memories I'll ever have."

The days immediately following Steve's death was most difficult for Jon.

"I questioned whether I wanted to continue playing football, but I didn't want to quit. Steve wouldn't have wanted me to quit."

A second team defensive back, the same position Steve played, Jon found himself on the bench late in the next game, homecoming, watching third and fourth team players entering ahead of him.

"I'm sure coach (Bill) Jenkins didn't really know my true feelings about playing, so I went up to him late in the game and asked to go. Jon recalls. "I approached him to ease the pressure on him. I don't even remember what position I was playing, but I do remember coach Jenkins kind of realized how I felt about everything after that."

"It was awful hard on him, but later in life, I think he's benefitted the most from everything," Jon adds. "I myself have seen him change a lot spiritually since the accident."

Close athletically, spiritually

After Steve died, we started saying the rosary before every game because we dedicated the rest of the season to him," he says. "We've continued it ever since. I know that probably doesn't mean much to a lot of people, but it does to us. We're really close athletically and spiritually, and I think that's why we've been successful in sports."

Organized sports won't always be a part of Jon's life as they have been the past few years, especially when he heads to Chad-minade College in Honolulu next fall.

The Kopetsky family has always encouraged the children to attend college where the apron strings won't reach.

"We look at it as a learning experience in life," Jon says. "You get out in the world and find out what it's really like. You can't come running home all the time."

Jon's older brother Dan went to Notre Dame at South Bend, Ind., and Greg to Albuquerque, N.M. Steve probably would have attended Notre Dame to study pre-law, Jon says.

Whatever happens for Jon in the future, he'll give nothing less than his best shot. "That's the way Steve would have done it," Jon says.

That's the Kopetsky family way.

Prep editor Randy York is on vacation.

friend brought my reflections back to reality, as the ambulance finally moved onto the field. Hampered by the intense fog, it had taken thirty minutes to come from a neighboring town. I left the locker room and came to the 30 yard line where Steve still lay. My parents and little brother were there, too. Except for my two older brothers, away at college, our family was together to share our need for each other.

Dad left with the ambulance. We followed in the family car for the 50-mile drive to a metropolitan hospital where neurologists and surgeons were available. We inched along at an agonizing pace through the smothering fog. No one talked. We just prayed. I thought, "If the ambulance just gets there in time, he will be all right." Ninety minutes later, we arrived at the emergency entrance of the St. Elizabeth Hospital. He was in good hands.

The look on my dad's face as we stepped into the emergency room shattered our hopes. As he came over to us, I heard,

"They're working with him. It's really bad. Injury to the brain. Chaplain gave him the last rites. Blood pressure shot up..."

The following hours were terrible. I kept asking, Why, God? Why Steve? Why couldn't it have been somebody else? Why?

With Saturday came the unbearable news from the attending physician: "A massive injury to the brain stem. There is no surgery possible. He is in the hands of God."

Sunday arrived with nothing to arouse hope. It was then that Mom told me — "Steve's not going to make it, the doctors give him no hope of recovery." Mom said that he had really died on Friday night. Only his body was being kept alive by machines. I just couldn't understand why it was Steve. He had led a good life and had a great future ahead of him. He hadn't done anything wrong.

Suddenly I realized that my brother was with God. I had been given faith to understand that Steve had reached his ultimate goal. God had given him life, and now he had returned to his Creator.

The hospital had listed Steve in critical condition from the time he entered. Now at 4:10 Monday, the machines were turned off. All signs of life ceased. Steve was pronounced officially dead. My faith that Steve had reached eternal happiness lessened my grief.

I went to school the next day and everyone was mourning the death of my brother. They wept and they wondered, Why did this happen to their classmate and friend?

Someone told me to get drunk or bust out somebody's window, to take my mind away from this tragedy. They just didn't understand how I felt. I hoped they would see that Steve had lived a lifetime in 18 years.

On a golden Autumn day, October 17, throngs of friends and athletes joined our family to pay last tribute to my brother.

Bishop Flavin officiated at the Funeral Mass. He said many comforting words, but one thought stood out: "When the shepherd chooses to move his flock, he takes the finest lamb, and the rest follow to a higher pasture." It was all so clear. God had taken the finest to show us the way.

Two years have passed. Football continues to be an important part of my school life as I am a member of our team, highly rated in the state. But I am also the possessor of a legacy of Faith, spelled out by my brother, Steve, and my devoted parents, as we waited out those hours of agony until God took him to heaven.

It was hardly a warm welcome for Bob Gates and his UNO Mavericks baseball team.

The Mavericks, rated 10th in the country in the NCAA Div II, with 12 straight wins, fell to Nebraska lefthanders Kirk Eymann and Cliff Faust Saturday 5-0 and 7-0 at the Husker diamond.

Eymann, a senior from Papillion, pitched six no-hit innings before giving up the Mavs' only hit of the game, a single by Rich Sheffe in the seventh frame of the second game.

The senior lefthander, now 2-1, walked three and struck out 12, including three in the seventh and the second innings. The furthest any UNO player got was on an error in the sixth inning when Mike Wurth reached third.

The fact we got three runs in the first inning and then added four more helped me the most," said Eymann. That's the most runs I've ever had to work with. This year I had just four runs behind me in 20 innings pitched.

Catcher Jon Henne singled in a run and scored on an error in the first inning and NU's leading hitter, centerfielder Paul Haas, homered over the centerfield fence in the second to help the Huskers to a 4-0 lead.

Second baseman Jeff King doubled in two runs and Larry Winum doubled in a run in the third to pad NU's lead, giving Nebraska its ninth straight win and 15th victory in its last 16 games.

"The ball Sheffe got off me was on a good pitch and I'm not too upset about losing the no-hitter," said Eymann. "I just hope I proved I belong in the rotation."

Faust pitched a four-hit shutout, the first shutout that a Gates-coached team has suffered in 102 games.

Gates, who was an assistant coach under NU head coach Tony Sharpe for two five-year stints before taking over the Mavericks last fall, also recruited Millard's Faust.

I even missed a fishing trip to get Cliff to come to Nebraska," said Gates. "We're a better hitting club than we showed today, but Nebraska's two pitchers didn't give us too many chances."

Freshman left fielder Joe Scherger, batting 400, drove in four of the Huskers' five runs in the opener with a three-run homer, his fifth of the season, and a one-run single in the first inning.

Faust got out of a jam in the sixth inning when, with runners on second and third and one out, he got the next batter to ground out to short and Haas made a diving catch to end the inning.

I was a little nervous, but I

think the tension helped me," said Faust. "I know all I have to do is throw strikes and the people behind me will help out."

Haas and Tim Carroll each collected two hits in the opener and the Huskers banged 10 hits in the game. The Huskers are now hitting .272 as a team and leadoff man Haas boosted his average to .500.

"Good pitching and good hitting is what makes you a winner," said NU head coach Sharpe. "It's beginning to sound like a broken record, but I love it."

Faust, who pitched a one-hitter in his last complete game, and hurled three innings of shutout pitching in his last outing, has allowed just four earned runs in 23 1/3 innings, while Eymann has allowed five earned runs in his 27 innings of pitching.

Meanwhile the Huskers have stolen 33 bases more than all last season and have scored 112 runs, 48 in their last six games.

Nebraska, now 15-4, will leave on a 12 game road trip starting Tuesday with a doubleheader at Creighton, while UNO now 12-4 hosts Missouri Western in a twinbill Tuesday.

We always want to beat the in-state competition and UNO and Creighton are the ones we like to emphasize," said Sharpe. The Huskers will face

Unpaid aides reap reward: LNE wins

When Lincoln Northeast's Craig Bence soared 46-11 in the triple jump Saturday at the Grand Island Invitational to establish himself as the third best in Nebraska prep history it was difficult to tell who was more excited, Bence or Northeast jump coaches Dan Zaloudek and Jack Swanda.

Zaloudek and Swanda are two of four volunteer Northeast assistant coaches who head coach Clayton Luther gives a yeoman's share of the credit for Northeast capturing the team title with 145 points over second place Lincoln Southeast's 130.

"They're great," Bence said of Zaloudek and Swanda. "Dan keeps us mentally psyched up at all times. He's a great coach."

Zaloudek, who was a long and triple jump standout at Papillion High School, said he thrives on craziness, and that aids him in keeping the jumpers psyched.

It obviously helped as Northeast placed one-two in the triple jump and one-two-three in the long jump.

"I'm really caught up in being a Rocket," Zaloudek said. "At first I felt out of place, but coach Luther said not to be that way. He's a great guy to work with."

With the aid of the jump coaches, who wear T-shirts with Leaper Coach on the back, Bence feels he can reach his goal for the year, 48 feet.

"I consider myself an average jumper," Bence said. "The national record is 53-9, so where does that put my 46-11?"

Now that 53-9 is a good jump. "Those four coaches give us an awful lot of their own time and we really appreciate it," Luther commented. "A lot of coaches just have assistants."

It's great the way those guys help Clayton out," Stephenson said. "With just two of us we don't have enough people to be everywhere at once."

who stand around. We put ours to work and give them a lot of responsibility."

Zaloudek and Swanda are joined by two other Northeast graduates, Lincoln electrician Mike Karle and policemen Steve Standley as coaches.

Karle handles the sprinters and hurdlers while Standley works with the vaulters.

Karle had plenty to be pleased with as Mike Sales turned in a triple in the long jump, 100 and 220, and then anchored the winning 880 relay team, setting records in all three of the individual wins.

The quartet of coaches, who give up about two hours a day and meet time, work for personal satisfaction alone.

Swanda got his reward when sophomore Tom Curry stepped out of the long jump pit after a 21 7/8 effort earned him a second place behind Sales.

"There were tears in his eyes," Swanda said of Curry. "Sometimes it seems like Kid (Tom) really hates us, but he got out and grabbed me and said it wouldn't have been possible without you jump coaches. That's what makes it all worthwhile."

Hastings St Cecilia girls coach Reed Stephenson, a Northeast graduate himself, envied Luther's position after his girls handed him the championship trophy in their division.

It's great the way those guys help Clayton out," Stephenson said. "With just two of us we don't have enough people to be everywhere at once."

No more bridesmaid for 'Conservation Club' Otoe County

By Tom Vint
Outdoor Editor

Nebraska City — Always a bridesmaid and never a bride? Not so for the Otoe County Wildlife Club.

For the past several years the Nebraska City organization has run a second best in the area of wildlife awards. Now, in 1977, the Otoe County Wildlife Club becomes the second winner of the Lincoln Sunday Journal and Star Nebraska Outstanding Wildlife Conservationist Club of the Year Award, presented in cooperation with the University of Nebraska Wildlife Club.

While conservation awards under the program have been awarded for the past 12 years, the club award is only in its second year.

The Otoe County club, organized in 1947, has two main accomplishments of recent years to credit its rise to the top this year.

Joe Voges, club secretary for the past 15 years, points to the club grounds, 60 acres of trees, shrubs and native grasses entwined through farm land, and the club's assistance in forming the Nebraska City Nature Center as major achievements of the organization.

"With the 60 acres we have, we're trying to prove that modern farming practices can still be beneficial to wildlife," Voges said.

The acreage, west of the city on Hwy. 2, lays in an "L" shape with the top of the L home for the clubhouse and trap range and the bottom having a wooded creek running its length.

"We bought the land on Jan. 1, 1970," said Voges, "with 61 club members pledging to each buy one acre at $800 each. Of all those pledges, we only had two who were unable to fulfill their pledge."

A trap range and clubhouse were put in. More than 1,000 trees have been planted on the area. Plots of native grasses were planted. Fruiting trees and shrubs were planted. And farming continues on portions of the land.

"Many of today's farming practices don't leave room for wildlife, what with fence to fence farming," said Voges. "We have to farm portions of our land to help pay off the rest of it but also to help show that farming, with consideration for wildlife is successful for wildlife and the farmer."

"Our lower plot of corn planted along the creek last year earned us $500 as our share while the farmer north of us, without trees to cut the wind or hold the snow moisture and rain runoff, had to cut his corn for silage."

A row of evergreens borders the corn plot to the north and the tree-lined creek to the south. The club's picnic area is planted with some 75 different varieties of trees, and shrubs and grasses border the plot.

The club plans school tours of the grounds for youngsters to learn of the various types of plant growth this year.

Another learning experience the club has actively pursued is the River Country Nature Center.

"It's been in the planning stages for over two years," said Voges. "The club acts in an advisory capacity and lends whatever assistance it can."

Voges, who is a professional taxidermist, adds flavor to the center with some of his shop samples.

The center offers visitors a look at the Missouri River life, past and present, plus gives a learning experience about wildlife. The center, although still in its infancy stage, has drawn acclaim from early visitors as a useful learning experience. It will have a grand opening later this month.

The club also has cooperated with the local high school for trapshooting programs and hunter safety instruction through club vice-president Ron Badberg.

The trap range apparently doesn't interfere with wildlife as several hawks and owls nest on the area, a good deer population exists and pheasants and quail also do very well, according to Voges.

"We don't allow hunting on this area although most all of us do hunt," said Voges. "We try to preserve the area for wildlife as much as possible."

"We've put in a lot of time planting trees and shrubs for wildlife," said 1976 club president Orville Carlisle. "And we've got a lot of wildlife around here to show for it."

In 1976, the club received the "Conservation Organization of the Year Award" from the Nebraska Wildlife Federation. The club has also lent support to many wildlife bills passed by the legislature the past several years.

Conservationist awards banquet

The annual University of Nebraska Wildlife Club awards banquet, honoring the Howard L. Wieggers Nebraska Outstanding Conservationist and the Nebraska Outstanding Conservation Club of the Year, will be held April 15 at the Lincoln Ramada Inn. Winner of this year's individual honor is Ord's Ken Petska. Honored as the club recipient will be the Otoe County Wildlife Club of Nebraska City. The banquet is open to the public. Tickets are available through Wildlife Club members or the University of Nebraska Poultry Science offices.

Jochum, Hilgert share student wildlife award

Ed Jochum and Phillip Hilgert share honors for the Outstanding Wildlife Student Award given by the University of Nebraska Wildlife Club.

The club will present the awards at its annual awards banquet April 15.

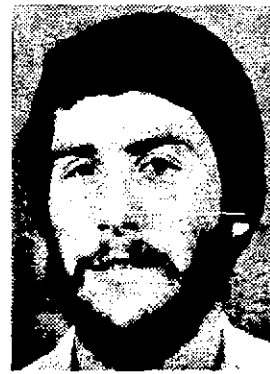

Jochum, a senior from North Platte, is carrying a 3.3 grade average (out of a possible four points) in a natural resources/wildlife management major.

He has been involved in the Wildlife Club for the past four years and is currently the club president, having held publicity chairman, secretary and vice president posts previously.

"I have taken part in most of the club activities, such as aiding the Game and Parks Commission's Ken Zimmerman from Loup City. Sen. Don Dworak of Columbus for Petska's efforts with LB861. B. J. Rose for Petska's Ducks Unlimited accomplishments. The Game Commission's hunter safety coordinator Dick Turpin for Petska's work in that area. Nebraska Council of Sportsman's Club president Fred Kudym for the Ord rancher's work in that area, and many more praising Petska's efforts in the area of wildlife conservation."

"A lot of this stuff I can't take the credit for," Petska said. "I like to plant ideas. It doesn't really matter who does the work as long as the benefits are there in the end. I only plant the ideas."

Last semester he was inducted into the agricultural

Ed Jochum

Phillip Hilgert

honorary fraternity of Alpha Zeta.

"Upon graduation in December with a degree in Wildlife, I plan to continue my education in graduate school and/or pick up a degree in range management," he said.

Hilgert, an Omaha with a 3.46 grade average in Wildlife Management, is vice president of the club. He's been active also as a hunter safety instructor and is a member of the Alpha Zeta Fraternity and Gavel Club. He is also affiliated with the American Fisheries Society.

Hilgert has given talks to Omaha area Boy Scout Troops on wildlife and fisheries, was a member of the four-man Nebraska Quiz Bowl team which took second in a regional wildlife conclave and earned Eagle Scout honors himself.

"I plan to graduate in December with a degree in wildlife management," he said. "I intend to continue my education at a nationally recognized wildlife college and receive my masters degree in fish biology. After receiving my degree, I would like to work for a state game commission or continue my education and teach college."

During the past two summers Hilgert has worked for the Nebraska Game and Parks Commission at Bassett.

weeks, and they find out how much trouble and pain that is, they're not about to let those birds out in a plowed field. They'll take care of some habitat for them."

Petska and his four boys, Greg 15, Brian 14, Bruce 12 and Jeff 11, helped rear chicks with a neighbor, Dale Melia.

"He did most all the work," said Petska of his neighbor. "And another thing that NRD did that I kind of liked, was they offered a pound of feed per bird for anybody raising pheasants."

Whose idea? Petska's of course.

"First of all, let me go back about two years and relate to you how our Wildlife Habitat Improvement Program (WHIP) was started," said Lower Loup NRD manager Richard Beran. "Ken Petska had, from time to time, talked to me about a wildlife program within the Lower Loup Natural Resource District. As a result of our talks, he personally appeared before our Board of Directors and was instrumental in promoting what I think is one of the best habitat programs initiated by a natural resource district in Nebraska."

Beran pointed out the snowfence concept, the pheasant program, the hours he put forth in support of LB861 and helping to draw up a local NRD plan for LB861, all as reasons Petska merits the conservation award.

"It is my personal opinion that if anyone in the state of Nebraska is deserving of an award for outstanding contributions to wildlife, Ken Petska would rank No. 1," Beran wrote.

Similar endorsements came from Nebraska Game and Parks Commission director Gene Mahoney, commissioners Ken Zimmerman from Loup City, Sen. Don Dworak of Columbus for Petska's efforts with LB861, B. J. Rose for Petska's Ducks Unlimited accomplishments. The Game Commission's hunter safety coordinator Dick Turpin for Petska's work in that area. Nebraska Council of Sportsman's Club president Fred Kudym for the Ord rancher's work in that area, and many more praising Petska's efforts in the area of wildlife conservation.

"A lot of this stuff I can't take the credit for," Petska said. "I like to plant ideas. It doesn't really matter who does the work as long as the benefits are there in the end. I only plant the ideas."

Lincoln

The state of 15 City Council candidates was whittled to 6 in the city's primary election. Those surviving the vote and who will be competing for the three Council seats in the May 9 general election are Sue Bailey and John Robinson, both incumbents, Joseph Hamilton, Leo Scherer, Donald Walker and T. R. Allen. Voter turnout was the lowest in 18 years.

The Nebraska Supreme Court ruled that the Court of Industrial Relations used the wrong data when it set the pay rate for Lincoln's firefighters. The lower court had used criteria which averaged several other cities' pay rates. The Supreme Court said the cities used for the average were not representative of Lincoln.

Martell residents are split bitterly over a restaurant owner's desire to sell beer.

Betty Abbott topped the Omaha mayoral primary, but Al Voss, who engineered the most successful write-in campaign in the last 25 years, stole the show. He beat out favorite Michael Albert and came within 500 votes of Mrs. Abbott.

Wallace Peterson, twice a runnerup in Democratic U.S. Senate primaries in Nebraska, was appointed to the new political watchdog committee, the Nebraska Political Accountability and Disclosure Commission. Nebraskaans are continuing to drill new water wells at unprecedented rates. In the first three months of 1977, there were 1,746 new ones reported.

Amadevil no loafer during Fonner win

By Mark Gordon
Staff Sports Writer

Grand Island — Rob Williams' major worry was keeping Amadevil concerned about running.

"He kind of loafs a little more this year. He's got a little more experience, so he thinks he doesn't have to run as much," noted Amadevil's rider after the colt scooted to a front-running 2 1/2-length verdict over Line Dancer here Saturday in Fonner Park's $8,300 Grand Island Elks Handicap.

"I hit him one time at the head of the stretch and then he started running," Williams said. "He's better, but he wasn't trying today. He grew a little and got a little stronger."

While riding the pride of the Kemling Brothers, Inc. here last spring and at Ak-Sar-Ben in Omaha, Williams fell in love with the colt. He's now Williams' favorite.

Amadevil had an outstanding spring at Oaklawn Park in Hot Springs Ark. He captured the $30,000-added Bachelor, won an allowance race and finished second in an overnight handicap.

That's why the crowd of 8,278 made Amadevil an overwhelming 2-5 choice. But still owner Paul Kemling of Aurora never really considered the race "safe" until the official sign was posted.

Kemling said he wasn't concerned about Amadevil adjusting to Fonner's five-eighths-mile course after working all spring at the mile track at Oaklawn. After all, Amadevil broke his maiden here at Fonner and spent last spring here.

Nevertheless, some horsemen and patrons wondered why Amadevil ran at Fonner for a $7,000-added purse rather than going for a bigger purse at some larger track.

"He needed a race and after all, a $4,800 (it was really $4,890) pot for winning is nice," Kemling said, adding that Amadevil will probably be entered in the $15,000 Inaugural Purse for 3-year-olds on May 3 at Ak-Sar-Ben.

The winners' share boosted Amadevil's career earnings to $95,904 — the fourth richest in the Kemlings' long racing history. The frontrunners include the speedy mare Bold Accent with $142,000, Roman Zipper with $130,000 and the now-retired Queen's Turn with $98,000.

Kemling revealed Queen's Turn broke down in her first start here this year and is retired to the Kemlings' Aurora farm.

In running a 1:19 4-5 clocking for the 6 1/2-furlongs, Amadevil returned $2.80, $2.80 and $2.20. Al and Eileen Cascio's Line Dancer, ridden by Walter Orona, placed for $19.00 and $5.80 as a 50-1 outsider. James Bonofede's Rule Me Bold, ridden by Randy Meier and one length behind Line Dancer, showed for $2.60.

Williams, with two seconds and one third, moved into the Fonner riding lead by two points (251-249) over Tom Greer, who had two wins — on Harold H.O. Poppe's I'll Walkhome ($9.00) in the first and on R.E. Lee's Sharp Melody ($7.00) in the ninth.

Hudson tops Bell in PBA

SPRINGFIELD, Va. (UPI)

Tommy Hudson became the first two-time winner on the Professional Bowlers Association tour this year as he defeated Don Bell 246-194 Saturday in the championship game of the $75,000 Fair Lanes Open.

Hudson, who won the $80,000 Monro-Matic Open last month, received $8,000 for his first place finish. It was his fifth career title.

Hudson, 29, of Akron, Ohio, began the title match with six straight strikes before leaving the seventh pin in the seventh frame. By then he had built a 64-pin lead to practically insure himself the victory.

"Being the first to win two titles this year is the greatest thing that's ever happened to me," Hudson said.

Easter song

"To be deeply religious is to have a passionate interest in the wholeness of existence;

"To seek for the connecting tissue in the apparent separations;

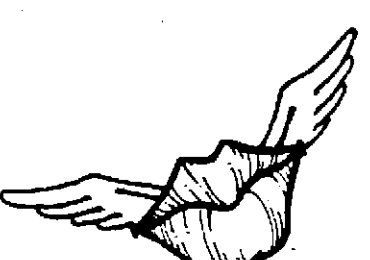

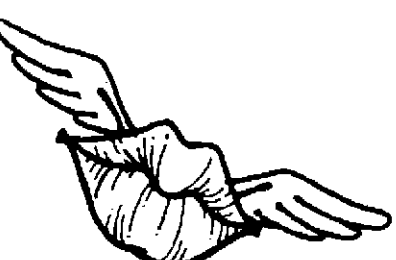

To turn from disorder and seek the unity which lies hidden in diversity;

"To pull hatred inside out and expose it as the dark side of love;

"To find no absolute end to the significance of life, not even in the event of death."

PUCKER UP

The first kiss ever shown in the movies was in, appropriately, "The Kiss," released in 1896 and starring (left) May Irwin and John C. Rice. It was scandalous at the time.

Here's a real lip-smacking bit of news: kissing's back.

"Shucks," you're probably saying, "I didn't know it ever went away."

Comes the word, though, that social kissing which apparently was not the thing to do at social gatherings of the elite for a while is now back in, and everyone is supposed to participate.

The kissing craze is attributed to the human potentials movement and, lest you be accused of (sigh) "not relating," you must, according to the new pecking order, pucker up.

Murray Davis, sociologist at the University of California in San Diego, says increased kissing is part of the general inflation of intimate signals.

"We kiss people we used to hug, hug people we used to shake hands with and shake hands with people we used to nod to. Isolated individualism is out. Today separations are not allowed. Everyone is expected to kiss everyone else," he said.

Onions, garlic

Everyone? Aw c'mon. What if the kisser has just finished eating raw onions and garlic for supper? What if he/she has the flu, strep throat, mononucleosis or a terminal cold?

Considerations of spontaneity, depth of affection and respect aside, one still can't help but ask, "Where do you draw the line?" If even perfect strangers are to pucker and in turn proffer their cheeks upon meeting, kissing will become quite complicated as everyone frantically tries to remember who they have and have not kissed. The name of the new game will be kiss and tell who you are.

Pity the house guest who, rather than risk being rude, tries to kiss all members of the household, mother, father, children and, oh gosh, the dog, the cat, the canary, the gerbil, the pet python...

All this provides special problems for Midwesterners who have been accused — and sometimes rightly so — of being conservative and rather provincial. There are children here who have never been kissed by their fathers. Brothers and sisters upon seeing each other for the first time in years greet by shaking hands — briefly.

Schmoozing

They do things differently on the coasts — or at least some of the people do some of the time. In New York, and presumably other places as well, kissing on the streets is an element of what's called "schmoozing," which includes kissing, talking, people-watching and otherwise hanging out.

In California, it has been observed, the French two-cheeked kiss is in vogue. In France, they are now kissing cheeks alternately three times and sometimes even more.

And there's more.

There is the kiss-off which, according to the Dictionary of American Slang, means "to dismiss or get rid of something or someone, often rudely and curtly." As a noun it can mean death, a brush-off or notice of dismissal from a job, especially without warning.

New Yorkers often call it "the California kiss-off" or the Hollywood kiss, while in Los Angeles it's referred to as "the New York kiss-off."

There is doubtless some of that kind of kissing done in the hinterland, too.

Although somewhat subdued, Nebraskans certainly are familiar with the custom of kissing. They, along with the rest of the populace, got to watch Jimmy Carter plant a bushel and a peck of kisses during his inauguration.

Kisses can be social or sexual, passionate or platonic and are, quite simply, touching or caressing with the lips.

According to 1977 Guinness Book of World Records, "The most prolonged osculatory marathon in cinematic history is one of 185 seconds by Regis Toomey and Jane Wyman in "You're in the Army Now," released in 1940. In a "smoochathon" at Pretoria, South Africa, Inge Orndedal and Billy Van Der Westhuizen kissed for 119 hours, 12 minutes. Roger Guy English of La Jolla, Calif. claims to have kissed 3,000 girls in eight hours — a sustained rate of one every 9.6 seconds."

Worship Men

Chaplain prefers role to traditional

By Linda Ulrich

Lowell Gaither doesn't look forward to the weekends like he used to.

It's not that there's anything wrong with weekends, it's that he likes his work so much.

As chaplain at the Lincoln Regional Center, Gaither has found he prefers this ministry to the more traditional ones he has been a part of within the United Methodist Church.

"Both the chaplain and the people here are in a less threatening kind of environment than in the church," he said.

Often people attending church are trying to project a certain kind of image, he explained. "People relate to me very honestly here. It's a very open kind of experience."

Constantly relating

As a minister of a church, Gaither found that he spent many of days working alone with little exchange between himself and other people. "Here you are constantly relating to people."

Most of all, "people out here (staff) work very hard. It creates a healing climate."

And people who work at the Regional Center quickly gain "an extremely heightened awareness that the residents are not all that different from us."

Serving both staff and residents, he tries to be as visible as possible. In addition to conducting worship services, he does counseling, which sometimes includes the families of residents and a lot of visiting with residents.

What is sometimes called "the ministry of presence" is part of his work and it is the process by which people are allowed to project their feelings. Sometimes, he said, it is feeling extremely angry at the church.

Not an old field

When working with the emotionally disturbed and the mentally retarded, he is reminded daily that "it's not that old a field, it's not that precise a science. People basically hurt, we can say that."

There are, Gaither said, excellent psychologists and excellent social workers on the staff. "We don't need any more and my primary role is as a chaplain representing the church."

A chaplain in an institutional setting is very different things to many different people, he said. "To some it is negative and I think people have the right not to be bothered by the chaplain. They have a right to the chaplaincy service but they have the right not to have it."

He hopes simply to support people in their full humanity in all the range of possibilities.

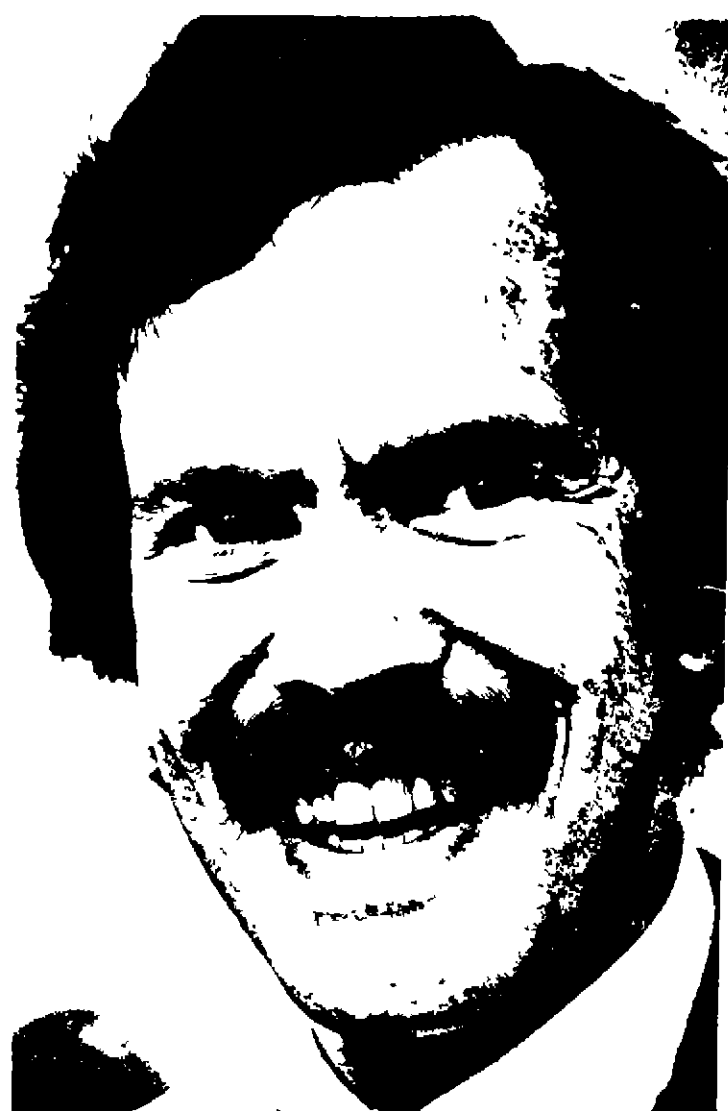

And to allow residents to be religious in their own way. "You have to let people use what religious imagery is theirs and not impose yours."

Judgmental

And, he added, part of the public image of religion is seeing it as judgmental. "People in an institutional setting feel guilty enough already. They don't need any help in that and I try to not create anymore in them than they already have."

Part of chaplaincy training, he said, is learning that if you can't be helpful, to not be harmful either. "Residents have asked me, 'Does God love me?' as if God makes exceptions and the question comes from suspecting God does not."

Part of what religion can offer them, he said, is a foundation something stable, something they can feel good about.

I'm not really so much trying to make people into anything as I'm trying to work with people where they are."

Gaither is trying to develop a clergy advisory board as a means of getting local churches more involved with the Regional Center.

We desperately need more community involvement," he said.

Vague image

The image many people have of the regional center is sort of a vague, distant ill-defined nothing. It hasn't always been bad but it hasn't always been good.

"Part of the discomfort some people feel may be because it's a good way to project yourself," he said.

We can feel akin with someone experiencing an emotional disturbance of some sort but we may not want to admit it."

Christians saw lacks in themselves and projected it all onto Jesus, he said. "We still do the same kind of thing."

Gaither is a graduate of Nebraska Wesleyan University and Div School of Theology in Denver. He completed the Clinical Pastoral Education Program at Bryan Memorial Hospital.

Library table back in favor

By Jason Thomas

(c) Chicago Sun-Times

The library table — that ponderous piece of furniture that stood majestically among the rest of the Victorian and Edwardian furniture until after the turn of the century — has returned again.

This time it is called the sofa table.

The new name is a result of the fact that the table usually is placed behind the sofa. It is small and sleek. It is the same height as the back of the couch and often is simple in design.

It is primarily the sofa table's versatility that gives it such tremendous appeal, said Ric Lawler of Drexel Heritage Furnishings. Homemakers have discovered that what started out to be a decorative cover-up for the exposed back of a sofa placed in the middle of the room has all the right characteristics to fill a variety of other roles.

Sofa tables are being combined with stools for dining areas. They are being used in bedrooms, often placed behind the head of the mattress instead of a backboard.

The back-of-the-sofa table is a 20th Century happening. It evolved when sofas were moved away from walls to create conversation areas around fireplaces and windows (or even in the center of the room).

Historically, the sofa table was visible in some 18th Century furniture designs. It was slender table with drawers and drop leaves at the end. During the Regency period it was filled with the needlework and writing materials of fashionable women.

Today's tables are simpler models. Just four simple legs and a top.

This simplicity is part of the scaled-down and multipurpose styling that is developing in the United States as room sizes become smaller because of high construction costs.

There are very few occasional table functions they can't adapt to, Lawler said.

Against a wall with a mirror above, the sofa table can act as a focal point for flowers and art. Then, when guests arrive, it can be brought toward the center of the room and used as a buffet or dining table. Or it might be a desk.

Most furniture companies are producing this table.

Drexel Heritage has combined its table with matching roll-out benches that fit perfectly underneath.

As I see it, Lawler said, the greatest virtue of the sofa table, whether it is traditional or contemporary in style, is that it allows one more opportunity for people to put together room settings that express their personalities and ways of life.

And it fits just about anywhere.

Mrs. Joan Cruz holds jacket display of her first novel, "Desires of the Heart."

Joan took dare, wrote a novel

New Orleans (UPI) — Joan Cruz knows how to get rich writing a novel — drop out of college, marry a truck driver, have five children and get insomnia.

Those are some of the things that helped Mrs. Cruz write her first novel, "Desires of Thy Heart," a romantic tale of which a major publishing company plans to print 400,000 paperback copies in November.

For an unpublished, unknown author to get an initial press run of 400,000 copies is almost unheard of," said Judy Keith, owner of a one-woman publishing company in Pennsylvania which bought the book and will bring out the hard-back edition next month.

"Joan just doesn't realize the phenomenon she is. It seldom ever happens that fiction by a nonpublished author will ever get printed."

Her publisher is right. Mrs. Cruz doesn't consider herself a phenomenon and is embarrassed by those who do.

"When I decided to start writing a book I sat down and laughed out loud," she said, but I figured if somebody else can do it, so can I."

'Somewhere else'

Her first effort at serious writing was five years ago, more than 20 years after she worked on her high school newspaper.

"I used to have this feeling, this unrest, that there was something else I should be doing besides taking care of the house," she said.

I used to try all sorts of things to find out what it was I was supposed to do. I tried all sorts of hobbies and what not. That's how I tried writing. I said, 'maybe it's writing, I'll try writing.'"

It was writing. Now Mrs. Cruz spends hours between midnight and dawn with a pencil scribbling chapters to her second novel in the leftover pages of her children's notebooks.

"I used to wake up during the night and read. I wouldn't say it was insomnia, I just woke up. After a while, I said: 'Well, why read if I can write?'"

Mrs. Cruz spent more than a year researching and writing her first book, "The Incorruptibles," a nonfiction look at the remains and shrines of 100 Roman Catholic saints.

"It hasn't been published yet," she said. "The publishers accepted it two years ago, but they're just now getting around to printing it."

High five figures

That first book is what led the quiet brunette to write her novel, which brought an advance check "in the high five figures."

My brother knew what I was doing and he challenged me to write a fiction book. He said I couldn't write fiction," said Mrs. Cruz. "I can't stand a challenge so I had to do something about it."

She did something about it and "Desires of Thy Heart" is dedicated to her brother, Daniel J. Carroll Jr., a wholesale carpet salesman in New Orleans.

"He was very happy about it," Mrs. Cruz said of the sale of her novel. "My husband honestly didn't believe it until he saw (a brief story about it in a New York column)."

Her husband should have believed it first. He was beside her when she wrote most of the book.

"I write in bed sometimes with just a lamp on and my husband asleep," said Mrs. Cruz. "It takes discipline because there are many nights when I'm awake and I don't feel like writing."

Hour on paragraph

I have to force myself to write and sometimes I spend an hour on one paragraph. Sometimes I just give up. But then sometimes after an hour it's like a second wind and all of a sudden I'm writing and writing and writing."

Mrs. Cruz, an attractive woman who looks more than a decade younger than her 45 years, said she is often still scribbling longhand at dawn when her children get ready for school.

It catches up with me," she said. "After about the third night I have to go to sleep early the next night. But I work it in."

The long hours and lack of writing experience, however, did little to hurt the quality of Mrs. Cruz' work.

All I had to do was write two extra paragraphs at the end of one of the chapters. That was it," she said. "I always heard that you get it back and you rewrite. I didn't have any of that."

The 346-page novel deals with an English earl in the 9th century who takes a vow of celibacy but then is forced into marrying a Viking woman to keep peace in his region.

After his marriage, the earl falls in love with his wife and the novel deals with the struggles between his emotions and his principles.

One of the strong points of "Desires of Thy Heart" is its historical references, which is ironic since Mrs. Cruz dropped out of St. Louis University partly because of her dislike of history.

Ann Landers

Dear Ann: I'm writing about the student who was caught reading your column in class and was punished.

As one who is involved with education and newspapers, I believe students could benefit from reading your column — beyond the advice that you give. All it takes is a teacher with a little imagination.

For example, your column could be used as a good example of lucid writing, correct punctuation, rules for capitalization, prefixes, suffixes and so on.

Students could be assigned to write a letter to Ann Landers about a problem. It's an interesting subject (one's self, that is) and the teacher would learn a lot about the student.

The wise teacher would use a student's interest in your column as a springboard to create a positive learning experience.

Guild's big wheels have homespun fun

By Franne Robertson

When a poor miller's daughter of fairy tale fame was commissioned by the king to spin gold (or else,) she was forced to promise the sinister Rumpelstiltsken her first born son in exchange for learning the trade.

Since the fairy tale, spinning has lost a little of the glitter and disastrous implications. Yet, it's nearly as important to Mrs. B. L. (Marie) Green, president of the Nebraska Handspinners' Guild, as it was to the miller's daughter.

"An adventure" and "the most productive and creative pastime I've ever undertaken" is how Mrs. Green describes her hobby.

In brief, Mrs. Green puts it this way: "I love spinning."

She is saying that she loves working, thinking, creating. With this hobby, skill is an absolute necessity and time one of the largest investments. Mrs. Green is hardly a beginner yet she spends about 68 hours to produce one stocking cap.

The whole process involves washing, spinning, winding, calculating, common sense and enough knitting as needed to produce the piece.

Calculating is an inescapable part of the job. Mrs. Green said, "There will always be variances from spinner to spinner," she explained and thus, there can't be any definite instructions. Given the same amount of animal hair, wool or flax, one spinner might spin a certain length, another might spin less.

After the spinning is through, mathematics are put to work to determine how many stitches to an inch your wool produces. The size of the knitting needles is an important consideration.

When using "greasy wool," unwashed animal wool, you must use four times the weight that the knitting or crochet pattern calls for. If the wool is washed, the weight is doubled.

Her own pet schnauzer and many of her friends' dogs provide the hair for much of Mrs. Green's spinning. The clothing produced has a "very luxurious texture," Mrs. Green claims. She has used samoyed, St. Bernard and English sheep dog hair to good advantage.

But all that work (and all that loose hair) does not discourage the 19 members of the guild from continuing their hobby. When they grace a business place or art fair with their spinning presences, it is "not to sell a product but to share our enthusiasm," Mrs. Green said.

Indeed, Mrs. Green believes, a handspinner has little choice but to be enthusiastic. She's only joking but what she means is there is a serious investment in terms of time and money. Wheels cost at least $100. Other equipment and materials, while not always necessary, make the hobby more interesting and they too add up in terms of cost.

Mrs. John Porterfield, an instructor in spinning at the YWCA, formed the guild two years ago. Most guild members have taken her class.

Arthur Johnston, another guild member has a special interest in making spinning wheels and other spinning equipment. According to Mrs. Green, he travels to exhibits and historical sites all over the country, to learn more about the craft and its history.

Mrs. Green owns a saxony wheel and an upright flyer, both constructed by Johnston from cherrywood, hardrock elm and walnut. Her upright flyer also is a "visiting wheel," so called because it is small enough to transport.

The guild meets on the first Monday of every month at the Gere Public Library to "share and exchange ideas and discuss sources of ideas and technique," Mrs. Green said.

A prospective member should be a fairly skilled spinner. "The guild is not a class or a beginner's club," she explained.

Members are planning a dye-in now for October. At that time yarn will be dyed with the natural residues of wildlife and flora.

Each member pays $3 annual dues.

Horoscope

By Jeane Dixon

Monday, April 11

Your birthday today: This is a mind-over-matter year. Early enthusiasm commits you to a serious line of action that has widening repercussions impossible to foresee. By year's end you acquire the means to go on to major achievement. Emphasis is on intellectual factors in relationships.

Aries [March 21-April 19]: Don't force any issues. Natural influences are already at work. Most current problems are on their way out, with solutions practically suggesting themselves.

Taurus [April 20-May 20]: Investment of energy, attention is your stock in trade this uphill week. Indirect approaches buy time for preparation, offer greater leverage long term.

Gemini [May 21-June 20]: Your opinion won't carry enough weight. Bring in backup materials, records of previous victories.

Cancer [June 21-July 22]: Play it straight. Answer "no" if intuition says so. Ignore speculative proposals. Reevaluate work for direct as specific, verified information arrives.

Leo [July 23-Aug. 22]: Feel encouraged for the long haul, endure a tough first day in good morale if you start a new job. Impulsive emotional expressions don't help matters.

Virgo [Aug. 23-Sept. 22]: Keep private life separate from career, away from close contact with people at work.

Libra [Sept. 23-Oct. 22]: Liberal adjustments wind swiftly downward to diminished leeway. Talks on any topic deteriorate into squabbles.

Scorpio [Oct. 23-Nov. 21]: Your leadership increases along with pressure to put personal projects aside while you push for the well fare of your group. Watch where your money goes.

Sagittarius [Nov. 22-Dec. 21]: Don't stir rivalry. Boost your progress, shoulder duties you aren't paid to carry.

Capricorn [Dec. 22-Jan. 19]: You're vindicated on an old question if you quiet your temper. Listen to advice but do the job your way rather than argue and get nothing accomplished.

Aquarius [Jan. 20-Feb. 18]: Set priorities. Don't delegate important items, however urgent, until you see how to work them out. You're harder on yourself than others are.

Pisces [Feb. 19-March 20]: Avoid anything secret. If you can't do it openly, then it's important never mind the publicity people have on.

Age-old kiss inspires verse

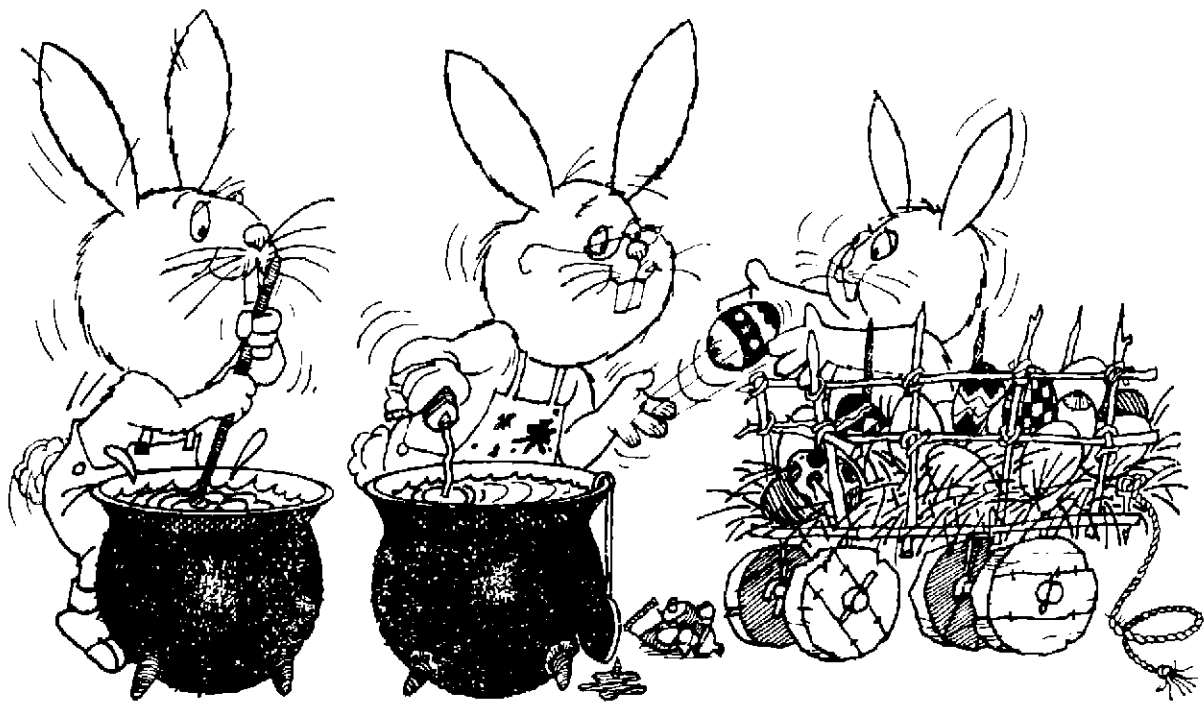

Here's to the lasses we've loved
Here's to the lips we've pressed
For kisses and lasses like liquor in glasses
The last is always the best

Here's head first in a foaming glass
Here's head first to a lively lass
Here's head first for a bit of kissing
For the good don't know the fun they're missing

'A kiss can never be absolutely defined. Because each kiss is different from the one before and the one after. Just as no two people are alike, so are no two kisses alike. For it is people who make kisses. Real live people pulsating with life and love and extreme happiness — Hugh Morris

Being kissed by a man who didn't wax his moustache was — like eating an egg without salt — Rudyard Kipling

The Easter egg means happiness

After the long, cold winter, spring is a time of warmth and awakening as earth comes to life again. Easter, with its flowers, its colorful eggs and bunnies, its religious services and family gatherings, is a celebration of new life.

Even the earliest known civilizations held springtime festivals to welcome the sun rising from its long winter sleep. They thought of the sun's return from darkness as an annual miracle, and regarded the egg as a natural wonder, too, a proof of the renewal of life. As Christianity spread, the egg was adopted as a symbol of Christ's resurrection from the tomb.

Eggs were colored, blessed, exchanged and eaten as part of the rites of spring long before Christian times. Then for centuries eggs were among the foods forbidden by the church during Lent, so it was a treat to have them again at Easter. In Slavic countries, baskets of food including colored eggs are traditionally taken to church to be blessed on Holy Saturday or before the Easter midnight mass, then taken home for a part of Easter breakfast.

Amazingly accurate

People in central European countries have a long tradition of elaborately decorated Easter eggs. Polish, Slavic and Ukrainian people create amazingly intricate designs on the eggs. They draw lines with a wax pencil or stylus, dip the egg in color, and repeat the process many times to make true works of art. Every dot and line in the pattern has a meaning. Yugoslavian Easter eggs bear the initials 'XV' for 'Christ is Risen,' a traditional Easter greeting.

The Russians, until the present regime, celebrated Easter much more elaborately than Christmas, with Easter breads and other special foods, and quantities of decorated eggs to be given as gifts. The Russian royal family carried the custom to great lengths, giving exquisitely detailed jeweled eggs made by goldsmith Carl Faberge in the period from the 1880s until 1917.

Many countries continue the age-old ritual of egg-tapping or egg-shackling. For example, Greeks form a circle and tap scarlet eggs one against the other. The one finishing with an unbroken egg may claim all the other eggs. (The trick is protecting as much of the egg as possible with your fingers.)

Pasch and Pesach

In English villages until modern times children have carried on an old sport called 'pace-egging.' The name comes from 'Pasch,' the word that means Easter in most European countries. This derives from 'Pesach,' the Hebrew 'Passover,' which falls at the same time of year. 'Pace-eggers' are much like Halloween 'trick or treaters.' They go from house to house in costume or with paper streamers and bright ribbons attached to their clothes. Faces blackened or masked, they sing or perform skits and demand 'pace-eggs' — either hard-cooked colored eggs or substitutes like candy and small coins.

In Germany and other countries of central Europe, eggs that go into Easter foods are not broken, but blown, pierced with a needle at both ends, and the contents blown into a bowl. The empty shells are painted and decorated with bits of lace, cloth or ribbon, then hung with ribbons on an evergreen or small leafless tree. Moravian village girls used to carry a tree decorated with egg shells and flowers from house to house for good luck on the third Sunday before Easter.

The egg shell tree is one of several Easter traditions carried to America by German settlers, especially those who became known as Pennsylvania Dutch. They also brought the fable that the Easter bunny brought colored eggs for good children at this season.

The Easter walk through fields after mass was another activity that persisted until modern times in German and Austrian villages. Whole families dressed in Easter finery would form a procession and walk out into the countryside, sometimes led by someone carrying a flower-trimmed crucifix or candle, stopping for prayers and Easter hymns. This is probably the origin of our Easter parade. Putting on new clothes or at least a new hat, scarf or ribbon is another ancient observance of spring's arrival.

Hunting Easter eggs hidden around the house or yard is a universal custom, and so is the egg-rolling contest. An annual egg-rolling on the lawn of the White House or Capitol has been held for many years, having been started according to legend by Dolley Madison in the early 1800s. A similar event is held in New York's Central Park.

For people of all ages the Easter egg is supposed to bring good luck. Balkan peasants used to keep Easter eggs all year to guard their house from evil. Some people believed that if you kept an Easter egg 100 years the yolk would turn into a diamond (there's no record of this ever happening). It's more likely that the Easter eggs given at this joyful season convey love and happiness rather than wealth.

The custom of kissing is neither new nor universal.

Polynesians express affection by rubbing noses. Samoans sniff. In other cultures, individuals press their faces together and inhale rapidly. In some parts of Africa, a gentle stroking of the arm is the equivalent of a kiss.

Around the turn of the century, the Chinese found the Western custom of kissing somewhat horrifying, considering it to be cannibalistic. Indeed, among ancient Egyptians, the word translated as 'to kiss' meant 'to eat.'

By the way, beware of the kissing bug, also referred to as the assassin bug, or the big bedbug, which is usually found in a bed where it feeds on human blood with a painful, toxic and sometimes fatal bite.

If the ability to reason is what separates man from nonhuman primates, another divider it seems is kissing. University of Chicago anthropologist Russell Tuttle says apes, monkeys and other animals sometimes press their lips together but only to sense what the other has eaten recently.

Kissing as an expression of affection probably was not popularized until around 500 A.D. The early Christians learned kissing from the Romans and made it a part of their religious ceremonies. The symbols of the kiss of peace and Judas' kiss of betrayal have remained through the ages.

During the Crusades, initiation rites once used by witches and noble warriors both tested the joiner's faith with the ham kiss. It too is a tradition, fraternities and other groups continued.

In 1936, Hugh Morris wrote a book which detailed not only how to kiss but kinds of kisses — the French 'soul kiss,' the vacuum kiss, the spiritual kiss, eyelash kiss, pain kiss, nip kiss, dancing kiss and surprise kiss.

But no discussion of kissing would be complete without mentioning George Meredith's advice, which is emblazoned on souvenir plates in every state: Kissing don't last. Cookery do.

Mrs. Robert DeVore

Book describes food of healthy peoples

By Helen Haggie

A former architect has put her skills to use in the nutrition field.

Mrs. Robert DeVore, a former Lincolnite, is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. G. T. Warren. As Sally Warren she graduated from Lincoln High School and attended the University of Nebraska where she received her degree in architecture.

In 1974, Mrs. DeVore, who lives in Point Loma in the San Diego area, conceived, researched and designed an exhibit, "Nutrition — The Appetite of Man," for the Museum of Man in San Diego's Balboa Park.

In constructing the exhibit, Mrs. DeVore had help from fellow members of the Klee Wyck Society, the museum auxiliary. The exhibit vividly compares typical diets of several primitive and rural peoples with our own and illustrates that people who eat more natural foods (to use a sick oversimplification) get their nutritional requirements much more completely than we do and suffer much less from health and dental problems," wrote Kathryn Russell in the Escondido Times-Advocate.

The exhibit was so successful, it hung for two years. It was praised by dentists. Dr. Ralph Ireland, who heard about it, suggested Mrs. DeVore write an article for the Journal of the Nebraska Dental Assn.

Another offshoot of the exhibit is a new book, "Dinner's Ready," coauthored by Mrs. DeVore and Thelma White. Publisher is Ward Ritchie Press.

The book examines the lifestyle and eating habits of nine healthy groups of people. They are the Marquesans of the South Pacific, the nomadic Sahara Tuaregs, the Gandans of the Lake Victoria area, the Digenos of Southern California, the Hunzakuts of the Himalayas, Eskimos in Alaska, the Chinese, the Japanese and the Mexicans.

Some of the facts which emerge are that these people obtain most of their protein from combinations of grains and beans, milk and milk products, fish and small amounts of meat.

Natural food found in the areas in which persons of these groups live make a well rounded diet. The authors describe the foods served by each of the groups and also the manner of preparation of such food.

Sample meals from each group are included. And comparable meals, which can be made in any American kitchen, are added. Americanized recipes for each meal make the book all the more interesting.

Charts concerning food nutrients in the typical American meal, compared with the typical meals of the nine "healthy" groups, are included.

The authors devote one chapter to snacks and compare the snacks Americans eat with those of the other groups. In the author's opinion, the Americans come off at the short end of the stick.

Though perhaps all readers will not agree with all of the conclusions the authors reach, the book is written in a concise and readable style.

Persons who dote on new and different recipes may want to try the Americanized meals.

Time of Your Life

By Jack Smith

Use your body

Your body may be aging, but it has a lot of life in it yet. It's up to you to benefit from it. Or, as one of the topics on a recent workshop in San Diego puts it, "The Human Machine. Use It or Lose It."

That is what the workshop was all about. It was sponsored by the National Association for Human Development of Washington, D.C., a non-profit social service organization that has developed a model program of fitness activities in cooperation with the President's Council on Physical Fitness.

The California Dept. of Aging is going on on this concept. The department motivated 300 community leaders from throughout the state to attend the workshop. The goal was to send these senior citizens back home to put on mini-workshops in their own communities.

The program demonstrated mild but effective calisthenics, ways to combine fun with fitness — as through a dance group — and swimming pool exercises that can be done safely by persons over 60.

Kenneth A. Hill, consultant on physical fitness to the California aging office, thinks that community action is the key to more active Americans over 60.

Health education and physical fitness play an important part in the lives of older persons," Hill says. "More imaginative methods need to be devised for reaching older adults and encouraging them to participate."

In evaluating its model program a year ago, the NAHD surveyed 415 participants in its exercises in Ohio, Delaware, Maryland and Texas.

The overwhelming finding was that participants were having a more active social and cultural life. They were seeing their doctors less often, using less medication and experiencing fewer aches and pains.

Medical data showed that physical limitations because of heart conditions, high blood pressure, and arthritis did not keep older people from engaging in the program.

No doubt the same need for localized action that was recognized in California exists in most other states. In some areas, it may first be necessary to generate a program on a local basis.

The National Association for Human Development has guidance material available at cost. It furnishes sets of graded exercises, a training manual, booklets and audio-visual aids.

The association's address is 1750 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W. Washington, D.C. 20006.

Watch those porcupine quills

By Phyllis Fiorotta

One of the loveliest crafts to come out of the North American Indian heritage is the porcupine quill mosaic. Quills were dyed in natural colors, cut to size, and arranged on various day-to-day items.

The design on this quill box dates back to 1860 and is from the Micmac tribe of eastern Canada. Since porcupine quills are hard to come by, broom straw will be a good substitute.

1. Select a wooden box with a top lid. You can also use a small gift box.
2. With the lid in place, draw an equal number of vertical lines equally spaced on all sides of the box, Fig. a.
3. Draw vertical lines on the sides of the lid in line with or between every second line on the sides of the box, Fig. b.
4. Draw diagonal bars between the lines on the lid, Fig. c.
5. Divide the top of the lid into four equal sections. Draw an even sided diamond in each section, Fig. d.
6. Draw lines away from all sides of the diamonds, Fig. e.
7. Draw in detail diamonds in the top and bottom corners of each diamond, Fig. f.

Quilling

1. Choose a broom that has thick, even straws.
2. With a utility knife or a single edge razor blade, cut away the split ends from the bottom of the straws.
3. Cut away the straws from the broom.
4. Select even-width straws, trimming away any imperfections.
5. Cut straws to fit on all drawn lines on the box. Use a thin line of white glue to secure them to the lines of the box outlining the design.
6. Color some of the remaining straws with indelible markers. A piece of waxed paper will protect your table top. Use browns, tans, and reds.
7. Cut the colored straws to fit inside the sections as you work, starting from the left.
8. Paint in a small area of the design with white glue and a fine brush.
9. Place the cut straws into the glued areas with a tweezers.
10. All the straws on the top of the lid are vertical. The straws on the lid's sides follow the direction of the diagonal bars with the other areas on the horizontal. The straws on the sides of the box form a zigzag pattern extending from line to line, and the remaining areas are on the horizontal.

Auction proceeds to help little children to walk; center to remain open

By Kathy Moore

Going once. Going twice. Sold. The bidder has just donated the price of the item to the Cerebral Palsy Infant Development Center, St. Luke's United Methodist Church basement, 1621 Superior Ave.

The April 17 benefit auction is for more than new materials or an additional staff member. It's to keep the project alive. Just barely kicking. But kicking is what the therapy and instruction at the center is all about. Kicking and rolling over. Eating, speaking and maybe even walking.

Jayne Snyder, physical therapist who visits the center once a week, explained it's essential the children are reached as early as possible for therapy. Sometimes the disability can be detected as early as the first three months. "The earlier the better," she said. "We can begin guiding and encouragement."

Cerebral palsy is a catchall phrase for brain damage that has occurred before, during or after the first four years of life. Ms. Snyder said, "I call it a junk term," she said. "There are so many degrees of the disease."

The extent of the disease determines where to begin treatment. One three-year-old can start walking after a few months of therapy. Other toddlers must begin with the basics, like rolling over, sitting and holding up their heads.

In many cases intelligence isn't affected by the damage. Ms. Snyder said, "Too often kids were labeled with mental disabilities because of speech and communication problems." Many have above average intelligence, she said. Although walking is often seen as the key goal of therapy. Ms. Snyder stresses the eventual need for overall independence. Even if a person is wheelchair-bound, he may be able to feed himself, dress and communicate.

The mothers of the center's children have rallied to keep it open. The program has existed in an on-again, off-again way since 1972. But without at least $1,000 a month for operating costs, it could be on its last legs, according to Mary Clark, director of the program.

In the beginning it was open five days a week. It closed in September and reopened on the current three-day a week schedule. The reopening was due to contributions from the United Cerebral Palsy office and donations from various organizations.

"Three days a week is better than nothing," one mother said. Since most of the nine children currently enrolled are under three years old they aren't eligible for the state funded programs. The mothers attend but usually stay in the background observing therapy so they can work with the kids at home.

Lucille Ulland, supervisor of the center, volunteers and a couple of paid staff members make the playtime pay off.

Children placed across a giant rubber ball can practice lifting their heads. A small bridge in the center of the room emphasizes taking small steps. In another part of the room, music and hand clapping advance coordination. Name tags help each child recognize their name.

When one small girl cries, the volunteers smile. It's one of the first times the toddler has made any kind of response at all. She doesn't want to go over the bridge. It's her own statement of anger.

All proceeds from the April auction will go to the center. The time of auctioneers has been donated like the rest of the items. At last count they had two oil paintings from Mrs. J. J. Exon, antiques, used furniture, new furniture, appliances and lots of miscellaneous stuff. Anyone interested in donating auction items can contact Mrs. Sharon Veng, 6700 Francis, before Friday.

Dear Mr. Corn: Rubber bridge, standard systems. Opponents open one no trump, 1 pass and the Stayman response of two clubs is doubled by partner. Does this ask me to bid or does this show clubs?

Big Mixup, Northville, Mich.

Answer: Doubles of known artificial bids are normally made to show the suit and guide the defense. Your partner's bid should have shown clubs.

Dear Mr. Corn: Every time the dinner gong rings, we have a squabble over how to score an unfinished rubber. Can you please clarify?

Hard Knocks, Metuchen, N.J.

Answer: If only one game is completed, the winners of that game get a bonus of 300 points. If only one side has a part score in a game not completed, that side gets a bonus of 50 points. Each side's totals are then compared and the side with the greater total wins the difference.

Dear Mr. Corn: What is an S.O.S. redouble?

Leaky Boat, Nausau, Wisc.

Answer: A most dangerous area of bidding. The partnership is obviously in trouble and both partners must have a prior agreement of what things mean. In standard usage, a typical example of the S.O.S. redouble is:

North	East	South	West
14	Dbl.	Pass	Pass
Rdbl

In this case, North is sending an S.O.S. and saying, "My suit is not very strong, please rescue in your best suit."

Dear Mr. Corn: What sort of hand does a jump shift over an opponent's take-out double imply? Our bidding was:

Me	LMO	Partner
14	Dbl.	26

New Horizons, San Diego, Calif.

Answer: Much depends upon partnership agreement. Lacking any agreement and playing a standard system, a redouble is the only strength showing bid. Therefore, the jump shift should show a good long suit but not a very good hand. A preemptive maneuver, something like

Gilbert Plagg looks at his painting, "The Last Supper."

Plagg paints Salvation Army mural

By Helen Haggie

The cafeteria at the Salvation Army Service Center has a new mural.

Painter of the four-by-eight-foot "Last Supper" is Gilbert Plagg, who has been a client at the center for about a year.

The former Californian, who studied at the School of Fine Arts at the University of California at Berkeley, came to Lincoln via Minneapolis and other places.

"I had my own sign and art business in California until the death of my wife about four years ago. Then I started roaming around. Traveling and being away from home is one way to forget quicker," Plagg says.

This is not the first time he has painted a mural. A similar one with the same title is in the Salvation Army Center in Milwaukee.

Gold leaf work

The World War II veteran has lost the sight of one eye. With that handicap, it is remarkable that he has such perspective and color sense.

When he was working in California, gold leaf work was his specialty. "I did all the gold leaf work when the Bank of Italy changed to Bank of America," he says with just a glimmer of pride showing.

Plagg says he came to Lincoln because he was following Brigadier Lew Forney, service center director. The painter expects to stay about another six months.

"I am waiting around to try and get my Social Security," he explains. "I was 65 Dec. 1 and I wrote for a birth certificate to both Sacramento and Modesto but they have no record of my birth. They sent me a delayed registration of birth form. I have to get some proofs such as my high school graduation diploma. I'm not worried. Everything works out if you just give it time."

And when he does get the Social Security tangle straightened out, Plagg hopes to go to Santa Clara to see his son, now 38, whom he has not seen since his son was four.

"During the war, my first wife and I separated and she took the four children. We both remarried and I didn't want to meddle in the lives of the children. I just sent along the child support," Plagg explains.

The artist has several grandchildren he hasn't seen, and he hopes to see them. He is very philosophical about his future, quoting "Whatever will be, will be."

Churches still stronghold of segregation — by choice

By George Gallup

Princeton, N.J. — The late Dr. Martin Luther King's description of the Sunday morning church hour as "the most segregated hour of the week" is borne out by the results of a recent Gallup Poll.

Nationally, a majority of white churchgoers (54%) report blacks do not attend the church they themselves attend most often. Among white Southerners the figure reaches 66%.

Not only are important differences found by region, but by religious affiliation as well, with a higher proportion of Roman Catholics (60%) than Protestants (40%) reporting blacks attend their church.

Defacto

While prohibitions against black members have been ended in many churches across the nation, defacto segregation still exists.

This separation is, of course, not always the result of racial prejudice. Among the reasons cited for segregation are a growing pride among blacks in their own churches and origins as well as the fact that church congregations reflect local living patterns.

One reason for the continuing widespread segregation in churches, as this survey reveals, however, is the fact that many white churchgoers simply do not want blacks to attend their church. This is particularly true in the South.

Opposites

For example, 60% of Southern whites who go to churches where blacks do not attend say they would not like to see them do so. On the other hand, among whites in the South who attend churches with blacks, 63% say they would like to see a greater number of blacks in their churches.

By way of comparison, among whites who attend segregated churches outside the South, only 28% would like to maintain this status.

"Do blacks attend the church that you, yourself, attend most often, or not?"

(White church attenders)		Yes	No
National	40%	54%
Northern whites	34%	49%
Southern whites	51%	66%
East	42%	58%
Midwest	34%	66%
South	67%	33%
West	40%	60%
Protestants	40%	60%
Roman Catholics	60%	40%

All white churchgoers were next asked this question:

"Would you like to see more blacks attend the church you attend most often, or not?"

Following are the results:

Would you like to see more blacks attend?		Yes	No	Doesn't Matter
(White church attenders)		65%	26%	9%

		Yes	No	Doesn't Matter
National	65%	26%	9%

Midwest	66%	23%	11%
South	46%	47%	7%
West	63%	9%	8%
Protestants	62%	30%	8%
Roman Catholics	72%	16%	10%

pare the view of white churchgoers who attend integrated churches and those who attend segregated churches — for the nation as a whole and for Southern and Northern whites.

Easter witness against execution is supported

On this weekend commemorating the resurrection of Jesus from death by state execution, opponents of the death penalty are offering an "Easter Witness Against Execution."

Three Nebraska church leaders have given support to the witness in Atlanta, Ga., sponsored by the national Fellowship of Reconciliation. The gathering of Protestant and Roman Catholic leaders includes seminars, a prayer vigil and a march.

The affair protests resumption of capital punishment in this country under a 1976 Supreme Court decision upholding revised state statutes. Currently, 332 prisoners are on death row.

In a statement issued this week in Nebraska, Bishop

Monk Bryan of the United Methodist Church; the Rev. Rueben Swanson, president of the Nebraska Synod of the Lutheran Church in America; and Bishop John J. Sullivan of the Catholic Church, Grand Island Diocese, asked Christians to give thought to the Easter weekend witness.

"Our Judeo-Christian heritage affirms that for the state to assume the power of absolute judgment is to assume the power that belongs only to God," said the statement in part.

The statement urged Nebraskans to work for the improvement of the total system of criminal justice and to develop a massive assault on social conditions breeding hostility and disrespect for the law.

Omahan dramatic in film for deaf

By Anita Fussell

If Jesus' listeners had been deaf, he would have signed the Sermon on the Mount.

So preaches Jim Price, Capitol City Christian Church's minister to the deaf. This week his preaching came true for his congregation as they saw the film "The Sermon on the Mount," in which Gary Theiler of Omaha portrays Jesus speaking to his followers in sign language.

Fitting his role visually, the muscular Theiler created a vigorous, believable Christ figure. The film's only drama came through his dancing arms and flying fingers.

"His signing is very articulate," commented Price. He explained that signing is as much as art form as vocal delivery. For hearing viewers, a voice quoted the Scripture being signed.

Theiler, who grew up in Lincoln, lost his hearing at age two as a result of scarlet fever complications. His wife, Janis, also is deaf, but their daughter, Tami, has normal hearing. Now a millwork carpenter,

Gary Theiler says in sign language, "First take the beam out of your own eye before removing the speck from another's eye."

Theiler is completing his B.A. degree in ministerial training at Norfolk Christian College.

He and his family were present at the film's Lincoln showing.

How did he feel about playing Jesus?

"I felt good," he reported through interpreter Jim Price, "but it was hard because no one can really imitate Him."

Theiler would like to become a minister to the deaf. Although there aren't many congregations like the one at Capitol City Christian, "the deaf really need full-time ministers," he said.

Except for Theiler, the film was, frankly, an amateur effort, but this didn't dampen the enthusiasm of its producers or approximately 200 people who attended Sunday's showing. "We really believe this is a first," said Price.

The film will be shown to deaf congregations throughout the United States. It can't be used in other countries because there is no international sign language.

However, the Deaf Mission in Council Bluffs, which financed the film, already is planning five or six more, Theiler said. Scheduled next for production is the story of Nicodemus, featuring Theiler as Jesus and Otto Gross of Lincoln in the title role.

Moonies move toward establishment

By United Press Int'l.

While the controversial activities of both the Unification Church and its deprogrammers have been widely reported, very little has yet been done to measure or report either the attraction of the sect or attitude changes members undergo when they convert.

At the recent meeting of the Association for the Advance of Science in Denver, J. Stillson Judah tried to fill in some of the sociological blanks.

Judah is emeritus professor of the history of religion at the Graduate Theological Union and Pacific School of Religion, Berkeley, Calif., and has done extensive work in the field of the new religious groups, including the landmark 1974 study, "Hare Krishna and the Counterculture."

He said converts to the Moon sect are young people who once were identified with the counterculture of the 1960s but are now moving to the more conservative views of the "establishment" at the same time that the "establishment" is beginning to move toward the counterculture.

"There is much to support the view that these young people have had their lives transformed," he said. "Instead of meaninglessness, they have found purpose and meaning in their new religion."

Judah also stressed that the changes in attitude among the converts were by no means uniform.

But he did find almost complete conversion to the church's doctrine of rigid anti-communism, including the one-fourth of the movement's adherents who said they were "moderately or strongly in favor of Communism" before joining the movement.

He found that a majority of the young people surveyed were moderately or strongly opposed to the war in Vietnam before they joined the church, with one third saying they had participated in demonstrations against the war.

Upon conversion, however, most of those — 75.5% — came to support the U.S. effort in Vietnam as "an attempt to stop the advance of Communism."

In his paper at Denver, one segment of a larger work on the Unification Church, Judah stressed that his conclusions were not exhaustive but rather a "progress report" on what appears to be basic attitudinal changes among Moonie converts.

He also underscored that he was not dealing with the more controversial aspects of the church — the brainwashing charges of Sun Myung Moon's theology — but with "only one facet of the whole picture of the Unification Church — how present members see themselves, their purposes and their changes of attitudes."

Judah's profile does not answer all the questions about the controversial sect nor attempt to pass judgement on Moon and his followers. But it does shed some light where in the past there has been mostly the heat of polemic.

Campus Converts

New York (UPI) — The Rabbinical Council of America, the rabbinic organization of Orthodox Jews, has estimated that there are over 5,000 "missionaries" active on Long Island College campuses seeking to convert Jews to Christianity.

Hope you're consoled

On Aug. 5 I ordered two items from J.C. Whitney in Chicago. They sent me one of the items but not the console for my GMC camper. I don't understand why I haven't received it.

Thumbs up

I would like some information on the Green Thumb. How many states have chapters of the organization, how many Nebraska counties have chapters and where does the money come from to pay the workers?

—Chester McCaughey, Broken Bow

ACTION LINE: State Director Delbert Niemeier gave us a thumbnail sketch of the organization. Founded in 1965 in Arkansas, the Green Thumb is under the sponsorship of the National Farmers Union and funded by grants from the U.S. Labor Dept. Its purpose is to provide jobs for low-income elderly. There are chapters in 29 states and Puerto Rico and it operates in 20 Nebraska counties. The Nebraska office received $500,000 for fiscal year 1976-1977. Workers, whose average age in Nebraska is 71, receive the national minimum wage, $2.30 an hour and work about 24 hours a week. There are 162 persons wearing green hard hats who work in the program in Nebraska. They do jobs for public agencies which supply about 20% of the cost of projects. Agencies usually supply material and equipment. Green Thumb provides only labor.

Title trauma

We purchased a car and wanted to transfer the license plates from the car we were driving to the car we purchased. The Seward County Assessor's Office told us we could not do this unless we sold the car or junked it and turned the title over to them. The Lancaster County Assessor's office told us we could transfer the plates and still keep the car. Does the law differ from county to county?

—J. Soukup, Garland

ACTION LINE: Neither county is interested in obtaining your car, but we can understand how you might become confused. State Motor Vehicles Dept. Director Jim Pearson explains that the assessors are interested only in issuing proper title registrations. To be eligible for a transfer of your current registration to another vehicle, you must first somehow dispose of your previous auto. Otherwise, the first vehicle is still considered in your possession and a second registration must be obtained for the new car. The new title may be made using your old license plate, as is done by Lancaster County, or new plates issued with each new registration, as apparently is done by Seward. The registration procedure is fixed — however, who gets which plates is a decision made at the county level, he says.

Concerned officials: some good in Terry's tax revolt

By C. David Kotok

Nebraskans are grumbling about taxes.

However, it is not the usual spring muttering of income tax time.

Apparently there is growing resentment toward taxes on real and personal property. Former Sen. Terry Carpenter of Scottsbluff has seized the issue and is pursuing it at a series of well-attended meetings throughout Nebraska.

State and local officials say they see some possible positive results from the taxpayer meetings, but they are clearly apprehensive.

Carpenter did not start what he is calling a taxpayers revolt against property taxes. He says his activity began after a Panhandle group became dissatisfied with answers it was receiving from an assessor. Then he said he stepped in at the group's invitation.

It may be kind of an untapped Populist movement, said Gerald Stromer, executive director of the Nebraska Association of County Officials. (Carpenter) is pretty good at reading those. No one could put this together but Terry's the sort who can bring it to a head.

Terry: no need

What Carpenter is telling the groups — in what some people are calling a harangue — is that there is no need for personal property taxes, for more local government and school spending or for statewide revaluation of real property.

I can help in a field they (primarily farmers) don't know a damn thing about — politics, Carpenter said. I can do more outside the Legislature than in side.

Carpenter's motives are mysterious to some officials.

One thing I've learned, said State Tax Commissioner Bill Peters, never try to outguess Carpenter's motives.

At 77, Carpenter says his age makes it obvious he is not trying to build a base for election to a major state or federal office.

I'm active not for myself but against others, he declared. I've always been successful at beating people. I'll be successful again.

Carpenter does not say whose political ambition he is trying to torpedo, but it could be Gov. J. J. Exon's. Carpenter warns that no politician can win in 1978 if he or she opposes abolition of the remaining tax on personal property or pushes for statewide property revaluation.

Mrs. Hays: misleading

The positions Carpenter is taking are misleading the public, said Furnas County Assessor Ruby Hays, legislative chairman for the assessors' association. Mrs. Hays has been working for legislation that would have all counties update property values in 1978. Time, effort and money have gone into the reappraisals and Mrs. Hays says she does not want them stopped by Terry's rhetoric.

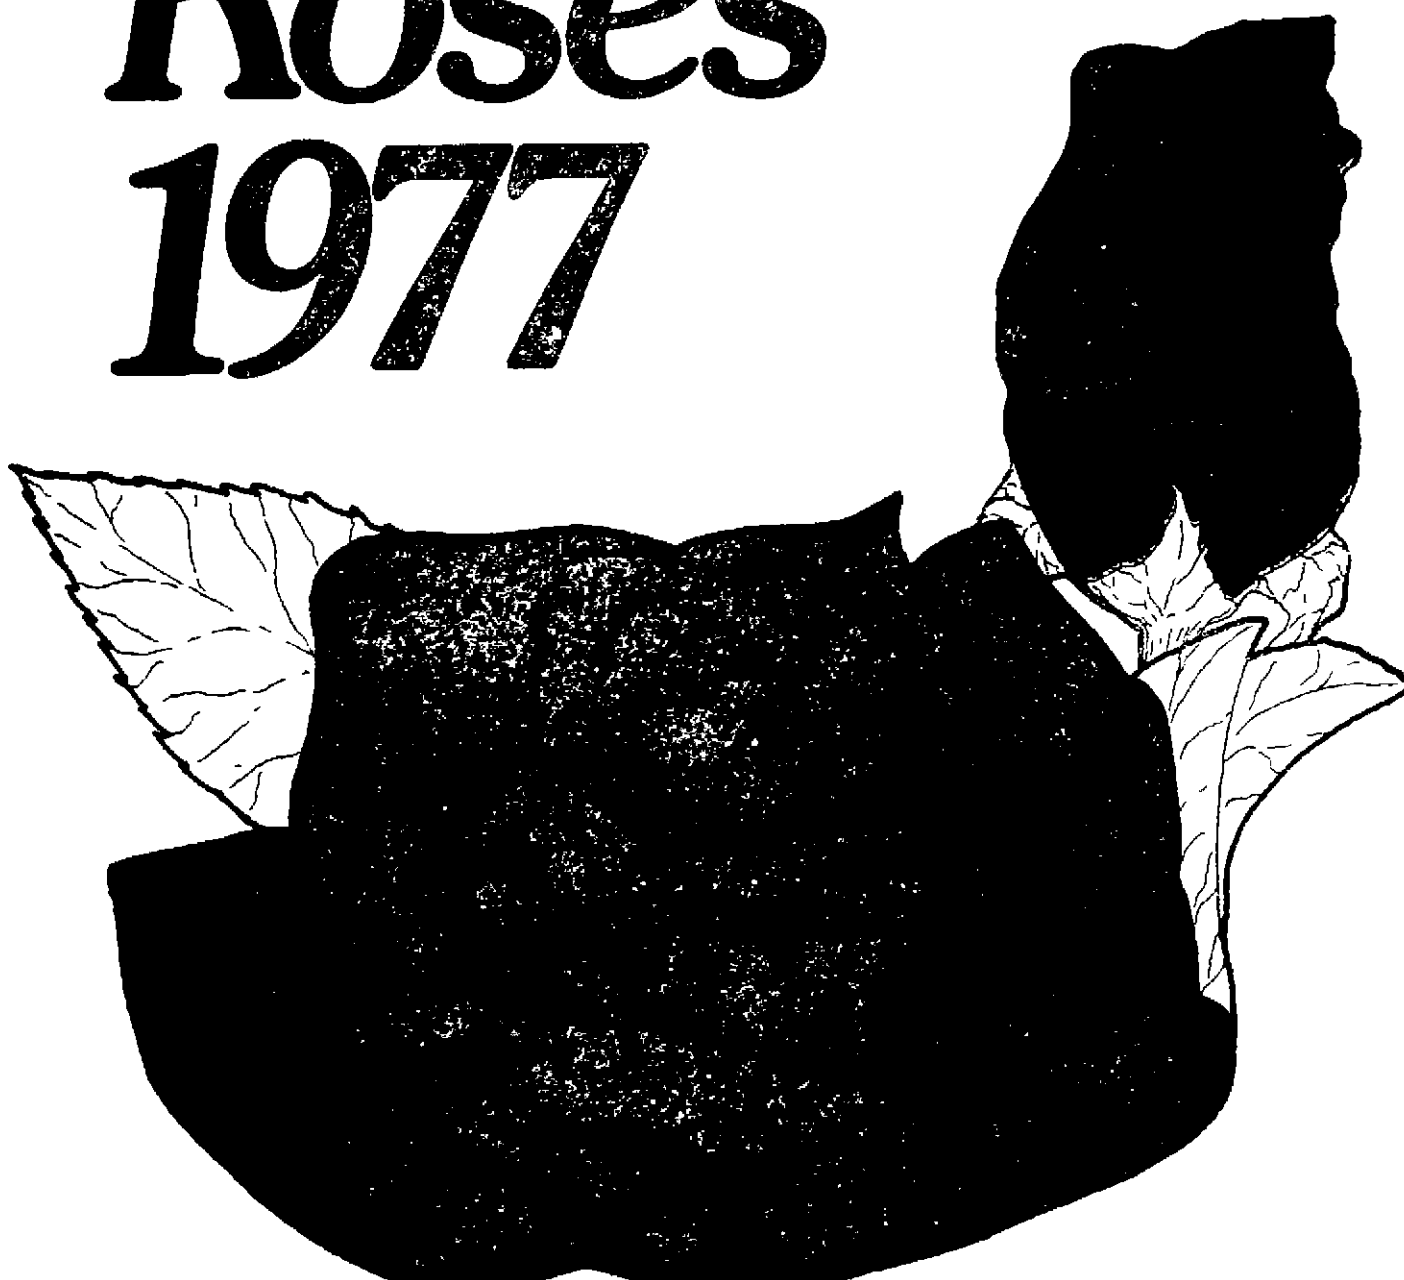

Mrs. Hays, Stromer and Peters say Carpenter is partly to blame for current valuation problems since he helped write the laws making updates mandatory.

There are always fears that higher

Soaring farm prices baffle Bergland

(c) Newhouse News Service Washington — Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland and other experts are worried and baffled by soaring farm land prices.

"The way things are going, land could get so expensive that people couldn't afford to eat," Bergland recently told a House Appropriations subcommittee.

High land prices could also speed the break-up of family farms in the Midwest and elsewhere by increasing inheritance taxes and making it more difficult for sons to take over from their fathers.

The trouble, says Rep. Mark Andrews (R-N.D.), is that "land is selling for ridiculous prices as a hedge against inflation." Bergland, a former House member from Minnesota, was shocked when he had to compile a net-worth statement as a member of President Jimmy Carter's Cabinet. His 675 acres of farm land were appraised by the Federal Land Bank at $500,000 or $730 an acre.

Grains, seed

For 27 years he had worked those fields, raising small grains and lawn seed. He had obtained some of the land for as little as $75 an acre.

He was not elated by any vision of sudden wealth of the $500,000 appraisal, he said. "Four hundred thousand dollars is inflation, and $100,000 I have earned."

Bergland has now rented the farm to his son-in-law for $20 an acre.

"I know what it is worth," he told the subcommittee. "I know what it can produce. If my son-in-law can pay me $20 an acre for all that land — for 675 acres for the next four years — he will have done well."

On a realistic basis, he said, land renting for $20 is worth only $250 an acre — not $730. Nobody, he insisted, would pay a rent pegged to a $730 valuation.

'Out of Sight'

"Farm crops are capitalized on land values, and in the last three or four years, when farm prices rose substantially, farm land values went out of sight," Bergland said.

"It has gotten to the point where it's completely unmanageable, and it frustrates us in trying to arrive at some sort of rational policy that is fair and equitable to all."

Andrews spoke of a young couple right after World War II who bought a good 400-acre Iowa farm for $100 an acre.

"Then IRS comes in and says, 'We want 120 acres in tax.'"

"That gets the one who is going to carry on the farm down to a 280-acre unit, which is not economic by any means, shape or form."

"We have lost another producing farm family, and ultimately the consumers are the ones who suffer."

"How do we address ourselves to this? Can we change or make more effective the inheritance tax laws of this country so that, for farms farmed by families, they can have a special category?"

Inheritance taxes

Bergland replied he will help the Carter administration in drafting tax reforms which he hopes will include some special help for farmers on their land. During his campaign, Carter said inheritance taxes should be based on land values for use in agriculture and not as a potential commercial subdivision.

What the government should do, Bergland went on, is look 50 years ahead and see whether the country is moving toward super-size farms that will squeeze out family farmers. The American farm owner and operated by one family, he said, is highly efficient and "is the world's best."

Bergland said he opposes any move to place a federal limit on farm sizes, partly because conditions vary widely around the country. A small vegetable farm in Delaware, he said, may earn more money than a 20,000-acre cattle ranch in Montana. "So you don't do it by acreage."

"But we do intend to look at it and see what is taking place," he said.

Farm anomaly

Bergland's economists from the Agriculture Dept. gave the subcommittee some figures emphasizing an anomaly in the soaring farm land prices.

Last year, as in most recent years, the return on total farm investment in this country was only a fraction of the profit percentages from other business endeavors.

The average farmer, considering the current market value of his land, enjoyed only a 3.3% return on his invested capital last year. Other percentages: food and kindred products, 15.5; petroleum and coal, 14.5; manufacturing, 14.2; and textiles, 8.9.

Bergland's remark seemed to summarize farm economics as he sees them: "My dad always said farmers tend to live poor and die rich."

Complex lending law badly needs overhaul

Although the historic Truth in Lending law is only five years old, an overhaul already is urgently needed of the legislation under which you, the borrower, are supposed to be able to find out easily and quickly the full cost of loans.

On the consumer side, disclosure statements which lenders must give the borrower, telling you the complete cost of a loan, have become so cluttered with non-essential data and complex language that, if you are a typical consumer, you can neither understand nor make use of the facts.

Regulatory agencies responsible for enforcing the law have become more concerned about confidentiality of banking institution records and their financial soundness than consumer protection. As a result, violations of consumer protection laws often go unnoticed or uncorrected. A recent report by the House Commerce, Consumer and Monetary Affairs subcommittee estimates that proper and full enforcement of consumer protection laws would result in banks returning about $7 million to their customers.

Also, federal officials who have authority to examine national banks fail to heed stronger state consumer protection laws — and thus, customers of federally-chartered lending institutions do not receive the benefit of stricter state regulations.

Lenders still are not encouraged to advertise the interest rates at which they lend money. It remains difficult for millions of consumers to find out where they can get the best deal on a loan.

The federal banking agencies that have truth-in-lending classes direct the education almost entirely to creditors rather than to consumers. The agencies fail to handle consumer complaints efficiently, despite the thousands of dollars spent annually on consumer affairs offices.

Moreover, they make little attempt to publicize where and how you can complain.

Just a sample

And this is just a sampling of consumer complaints. Creditors have a host of objections, too.

- The regulations are complicated and constantly changing, so it's tough for creditors to keep up to date on what the federal government wants. They agree with consumers that credit cost statements are too complicated and therefore too costly to produce in the detail required.
- Creditors resent the time it takes to complete the paperwork as much as customers do.
- They fear the civil penalties with which they can be slapped for relatively minor truth in lending violations.
- Regulators also urge reform.
- Regulators who agree that the law is too complex to understand and to comply with, attribute this to the original legislation, the subject matter, and the insistence of creditors on detailed guidance.

Roy Phillips accepts Metro Tech position

Omaha (AP) — Dr. Roy G. Phillips, former president of Seattle, Wash., Central Community College, will assume the duties of campus director at the Fort Omaha Campus Of Metropolitan Technical Community College Monday, April 11.

Phillips will become the highest ranking black official of the college.

They realize their need for more examiners trained in consumer protection compliance.

They seek additional assurances that they have authority to order banks to reimburse consumers hurt by violations.

Reform proposed

Against this background, lending reform legislation is being proposed by Rep. Benjamin Rosenthal (D-N.Y.) to:

- Require lenders to post rates for major types of consumer loans and the Federal Reserve Banks to compile and publicize the information in readable pamphlets.
- Make sure that examiners notify you, a borrower, of substantial truth violations where a creditor fails to do so. This would make you more alert and protective of your own rights and would spur creditors to set up their own internal review procedures.
- Reduce and simplify the law's disclosure requirements so you could understand the statements, while lenders would be less fearful.
- Give state officials authority to examine federally chartered lenders to make certain that lenders are obeying state laws and push federal agencies into doing more to educate you about your rights. Particularly valuable would be pamphlets suitable for elementary and high school students.
- You must know your rights and the procedures for enforcing them if you are to try to protect those rights and punish violators.

California has most prisoners

(c) Chicago Sun-Times Washington — California led the nation in the number of prisoners behind bars in 1976, a year that saw the inmate population in the United States hit a record 283,145, according to Justice Dept. figures.

The country's largest state had 21,998 inmates in its penal institutions as of Dec. 31, 1976, according to statistics compiled by the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, a department agency.

After California, Texas had the most inmates, with 20,717, followed by Florida (18,983), New York (17,749), North Carolina (13,261), Ohio (12,425), Michigan (12,462), Georgia (12,106), Illinois (9,543) and Maryland (7,912), rounding out the Top 10. Nebraska had 1,330.

Poor worker gets coffee boom dregs

Mexico City (UPI) — Rising coffee prices are proving to be a mixed blessing for Latin America's coffee-growing countries.

The doubling of prices in the past year has brought inflation, smuggling, speculation and shortages in some producing nations.

On the positive side, big growers are making big money, small farmers are getting more for their crops, and the dollar income is a welcome boon to the balance of payments picture. But the benefits are not filtering down to the poor.

In Brazil, where last year's frost was a major cause of the worldwide coffee shortage that led to the price boom, coffee income of $4 billion will pay for oil imports this year.

Prices double

World market prices of coffee have about doubled in the past year, and U.S. consumers were paying $2.96 for a one-pound can of roasted coffee in February, in contrast to $1.61 in February a year ago. According to the latest statistics from the U.S. Bureau of Labor. Prices have gone up since.

"We are swimming in gold," said Francisco dos Santos Rites, owner of 200,000 coffee trees in Minas Gerais, an area not affected by the frost. "I have buildings, home, land, an apartment in Sao Conrado (an exclusive neighborhood in Rio), cars and comfort. All this at the cost of coffee."

No income

By contrast, hundreds of thousands of migrant workers had nothing to pick and thus no income last harvest.

Mexico, Latin America's third largest coffee producer (after Brazil and Colombia) will earn $600 million from coffee exports this year. About 105,000 producers are getting about $130 a sack for their coffee now, in contrast to about $20 three years ago.

"They are living better, eating better, investing more money in their farms," said Fausto Cantu Pena, director of Mexican Coffee Institute.

Coffee taxes have led to improvements in municipal services, helping the town of Atoyac de Alvarez in Guerrero State, for example, pave its streets.

9¢ for 2.2 pounds

But life hasn't changed much for the pickers who bring in the crop. Julia Campos, an illiterate mother of five who picks coffee at an experimental plantation near Jalapa, Veracruz, earns about 9¢ for every 2.2 pounds of coffee beans she picks. Last year she made only about 5¢ for every 2.2 pounds, but inflation has eaten away the benefits.

"The money you earn isn't enough for anything," she said.

Inflation spurred by an inflow of new money has been a troubling side effect of the coffee boom in many countries.

In Colombia, 300,000 coffee growers are making more than double what they used to. But farmers were so poor before that the increases do not allow them any luxuries.

Tiny El Salvador expects to earn $1 billion from coffee exports this year to help pay its foreign debt and invest in public works. But coffee money has not helped improve living standards for the peasants.

In Costa Rica, the government fears the coffee bonanza will bring inflation and has been urging growers not to splurge.

Arthur Rubinstein

Pianist, 90, still peppy

By Hanns Neuerbourg

Geneva, Switzerland (AP) — Arthur Rubinstein is working hard to complete his memoirs, visibly savoring the thought that the new book may cause him "lots of difficulties."

As peppy as ever, the 90-year-old piano virtuoso has fully recovered from a recent bout with pneumonia and again spends much of his time dictating what he claims he previously was afraid to tell.

He sees trouble ahead because the sequel to his best-selling "My Young Years" will lead up to the present and thus has a greater potential for annoying some of the prominent names it will feature.

"Most people I told about in the first book were nice and dead," he explained in his elegantly furnished, small Geneva apartment. "But I was afraid of writing the second part."

He still has more than 40 years to cover in the new volume, brimming with anecdotes and covering the time when he changed from a largely playboy star to one of the great men on the concert circuit, helped by his wife of 44 years, the former Aniela Milnarski.

But he is confident of finishing dictation ahead of the publisher's January 1978 deadline.

At what some call a "Biblical age," Rubinstein loves life, hates bores and does not fear death.

Rubinstein said his personal philosophy is to "take life as it is, for better or worse."

"I love what is given to us. I have never lost my zest for life."

The Polish-born Rubinstein became an American citizen after World War II and has homes in New York, Paris and Geneva. But it is in Paris where he has felt "at home" ever since he first saw the Place de la Concorde 73 years ago. "In Paris, you live," he said.

"The French even made me a full-fledged academician, complete with sword," he gestured with a grin, as if he were about to draw one. "I can kill anybody. I am a dangerous fellow," he said, looking distinctly boyish.

His mood changed with the topic. How does he see the future of music, what does he think of contemporary music?

"You would never get me to listen to music which has no emotion. Most people who go to such concerts do it because they are snobs who fear being called dated," he said.

Later Rubinstein tempered his remarks: "The music of today is out of reach for me ... I have no right to judge what I do not understand."

"At the end of our lives, we all come back to Mozart," he said. "A few notes by Mozart touch you more than a whole large work by Beethoven. We come to that conclusion. That is emotion, pure and simple."

Large areas of glass under the prow and the large outdoor deck around two sides are typical of this style of house.

House of the Week

Prow house hints of beach, but fits with wood, mountain

By Andy Lang, AP

Design R 215 is called a prow house because it resembles the front of a ship.

Created as a second home or vacation house, the characteristics of this type of structure are the steep sloped roof, the low sides, the windowed prow and the large outside deck area. It can fit in anywhere — beach, wooded area, lake, mountains.

The interior of architect Samuel Paul's design is as dramatic as the exterior, since the advantages of the prow or angled front wall is the commanding view it offers from the inside. The main area, the combined living room-dining room, is spacious with a sloping ceiling that starts at the seven-foot side walls and soars to a height of 19 feet at the ridge. All the beams are exposed.

On one side of this area is a huge rustic stone fireplace which allows for a comfortable grouping of furniture around it. On the other side are either cedar or redwood vertical boards in their natural finish. The dining area is located on this side next to the kitchen. The prow windowed end can be seen from any part of this large room and from a balcony on the second floor. Two large sliding glass doors give access to the outdoor deck.

Towards the rear, the house, in effect, becomes a story-and-a-half with the kitchen, two bedrooms and a bath on the ground floor and a bedroom and bath on the second level within the slope of the roof.

The house is entered from the side of the wrap-around deck. An outside vestibule offers protection from the rain or snow. The kitchen, convenient to the entrance door, is efficiently arranged in an ell shape with space in the opposite corner for breakfast or informal eating. If dining is to be on the deck, then the sliding windows in the kitchen can act as a pass thru for food and dishes.

Off the hallway leading to the rear bedrooms are two closets, heater and hot water closet, the entrance to the bathroom and a piggyback washer-dryer combination.

Two bedrooms in the rear are each equipped with two large windows and closets. A rustic but esthetic stair leads to the second floor, which has a balcony, linen closet, clothes closet, bath and a third bedroom. Added storage space is located in the roof area on each side of the bedroom.

Next to the projection of the kitchen wall is an outdoor shower off the deck, which is made of wood planking, either cedar, redwood or Douglas fir. There is a crawl space under the first floor.

Garden gossip

Accessories in yard can add or detract

- As leaves expand on peony plants, use fungicide cover spray
- Bluegrasses susceptible to leaf spot need preventative fungicide
- Keep flowering holiday plants evenly moist
- Remove pollen sacks on the Easter lily
- Keep mulches handy to cover tender plants

By Brent Hoadley
County Agent—Horticulture

A piece of garden sculpture, an outdoor fireplace and a sandstone wall have something in common: they are accessories — items added to the landscape. Any of these items can greatly add to or detract from the total effect created in the landscape.

Accessories in the landscape can serve a multitude of uses. Some, such as well-placed light fixtures, are primarily functional. Others, such as sculpture, specimen rocks or stumps and fancy pruned shrubs, are primarily esthetic items. Still others, such as fences, house numbers, mailbox posts, planters and garden shelters, have both functional and esthetic value.

Choosing a landscape accessory is a lot like choosing a new lamp for the living room. It isn't enough that you like the item, although that's a good start. Somehow, the object must fit into and contribute to the existing landscape effect. The accessory should complement the integrity of the landscape design, not compete with it. Repeat elements in the landscape to tie the whole effect together.

Complementary accessories repeat the dominant lines, colors, textures and motifs of the basic design. They help to give an impression of unity and help to create or maintain a mood. For instance, a brick chimney and brick patio or a horizontal board fence stained to repeat a color common to the house help tie the home and grounds together. Accessories also may provide contrast or serve as the focal point for the home grounds. A wood deck designed with small spaces between the boards repeats lines uncommon to but complementary to a cubical house.

When choosing landscape accessories, keep in mind the maintenance they will require. A split rail fence that adds a great deal to the cozy informality of your home when it's freshly painted could be quite an eyesore if not repainted frequently. Hand trimming around each post would increase lawn mowing time, too. In the long run, posts will rot and have to be replaced.

Monday meeting of Garden Club

The Garden Club of Lincoln meets at 7:45 p.m. Monday at Culler Junior High School, 52nd and Vine. Richard Burton, who teaches art at Union College and flower arranging at Southeast Community College, will speak on collecting, drying and preserving plant materials for winter bouquets.

Mrs. Joella Olson will tell what to do in the garden in April and Mrs. Glen Litzenberg will discuss her favorite garden spot. Garden Club meetings are open to anyone interested.

REALTOR—Austin Realty Company

WHOLESALE VS RETAIL LAND

In the normal marketplace, there are two price levels — wholesale and retail. The purchase and sale of raw land is no different. A review of the sales price history of any large parcel of land will show abrupt little jumps as the acreage is subdivided and sold off in smaller lots.

Much of this increase is due to the cost of improvements such as sewers, streets, sidewalks, and utilities. But increases of this sort are also due to the wholesale/retail marketing structure of the world. Therefore, consider bulk buying land at a wholesale level a good way to buy. It may take the piecing of several financial sources (partners, for example). But ten acres are available for $5 per acre, then forty acres may be available for $4,000 per acre. You are buying from one seller.

Conversely, assembling which is the act of buying group of small parcels to make up one large parcel, can prove very costly because the buyer will have to pay retail prices.

YOUNG COLUMBUS XXI 1977

Meet two of the Youngest Admirals in Nebraska's Great Navy

Rhonda Ricketts and Mary Ellen Behne were recently appointed Admirals in the Great Navy of Nebraska by Governor Jim Exon.

Their efforts during our 1977 Young Columbus Contest (sponsored by Sunday Journal-Star and Parade Magazine) have earned them twelve exciting days touring Spain & Portugal. Rhonda & Mary Ellen were chosen to represent the more than 1,600 Sunday Journal and Star carriers on the basis of their route management, scholastic standing and citizenship.

In Madrid and Lisbon, the girls will act as representatives of Governor Exon in presenting gifts to the Mayor of each city and also to King Juan Carlos of Spain.

Beatrice plans museum's 2nd birthday fete

The celebration will feature an antique car tractor truck and engine show from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. The museum will be open during those hours.

Our nurseryman speaks

If you want a hilltop home, use trees to slow wind

"The electric light fixture over the dining room table began to sway. The dishes began to rattle in the cabinets. The whole place began to shake."

"My husband dashed outside, grabbed a chain and lashed our mobile home to a truck and heavy piece of equipment."

Around Lincoln are many high and slightly places to build a new home. At present, such sites are very popular and sell for thousands of dollars above normal market price. But they have one major drawback: the wind.

From now until September is the Nebraska storm season. Each year during this period, we can expect destructive winds and, of course, the most vulnerable properties are those most exposed.

In the case above, the mobile home sat on a big hill from which the Capitol, more than 10 miles away, could be seen. The view was breathtaking, but after their frightening experience the owners wanted to do something to slow the wind until their permanent home was built.

Of course, windbreaks like those planted at the end of the great drought of the 1930s have proved to be highly effective in slowing "straight winds" (nothing will stop a tornado). But when trees are planted in two or three rows to slow the wind, views, of course, are obliterated.

The landscaping problem becomes: How can I stop the most wind and yet leave the most view?

One answer is to plant trees that eventually will grow large enough so that you can see out from under them. The growth pattern of the red oak is excellent for this.

First, the red oak has strong, sturdy wood. You can plant it close to the house without fear that it will blow over and damage the structure. Moreover, red oak limbs turn up rather than down.

So this tree can be trimmed to enable you to see out of all windows on a one-story house. Another good tree for this purpose is sycamore, but you must accept the anthracnose problem that is associated with this tree. Foliage discolors in damp weather. In rare cases, this disease may kill the tree.

Another way to solve the wind problem is to select the view that you want and then put blinkers on both sides of it. In horse and buggy days, blinkers were put around the eyes of an animal so that he could not be distracted by things other than those directly in front of him.

If trees are planted in heavy screens on either side of the view to be left open, the eye is directed to the desired view and only a wind from the compass

It's that time of year again!

Tiny Marine fits leatherneck mold

San Diego (AP) — Jerry J. Pleban's 4-foot-9 frame doesn't fit the stereotype of the U.S. Marine and even fails to meet the Corps' 5-foot minimum height requirement.

But a Marine he is, thanks to a commandant's waiver allowing the 115 pounder to enlist. Officials at the Marine Corps Recruit Depot believe he is the smallest Marine.

Observatories to be launched

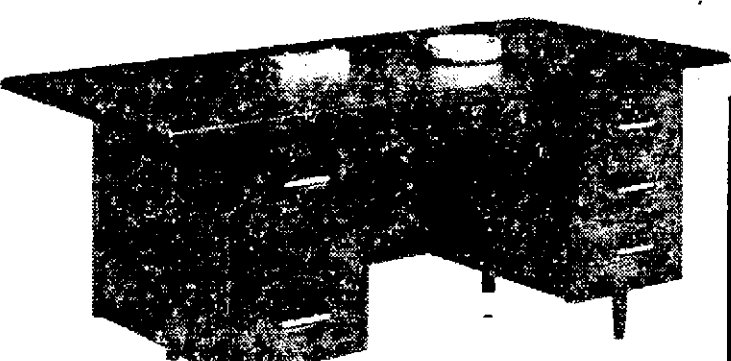

Washington (UPI) — The Federal Space Agency plans to launch the first in a new series of astronomical observatories next month to study some of the most intriguing mysteries of the universe.

The big 3½-ton satellite will gaze from above Earth's atmospheric radiation screen at high energy X-rays and low energy Gamma rays coming from the depths of space.

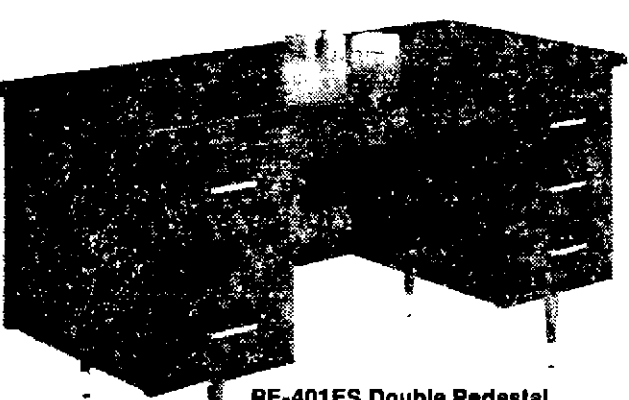

Scientists hope the satellite and two successors will tell more about such phenomena as pulsars, quasars, radio galaxies and black holes, the hypothesized final stages of dying stars so densely packed that nothing including radiation can escape their immense gravity.

Big electronic sign pioneers ad medium

A giant electronic sign at about 47th and Vine scheduled for full burn operation Saturday will pioneer a new advertising medium in Lincoln and probably the entire U.S., says Dick Schaffer.

Named Action Adeline by Schaffer, the sign is a common advertising medium which will carry messages of virtually any business.

The sign, manufactured by Mayhew Products Corp. of Grand Island, can flash messages of two to eight seconds duration once every minute 1,440 times daily 10,800 times weekly or more than half a million times yearly.

It will also flash public service messages, the time and temperature.

While there are smaller electronic signs in the area in use by businesses, there is none approaching the size, electronic development and capability of Action Adeline, he says.

Mayhew Products claims that Action Adeline is the largest sign of its kind west of Chicago, with these vital statistics: 50 feet high, 48 feet long, with two lines of ad copy — each four feet tall.

Using a computerized terminal at 620 No. 48th, Schaffer & Associates will program messages over telephone lines, with the capability of making instant copy changes.

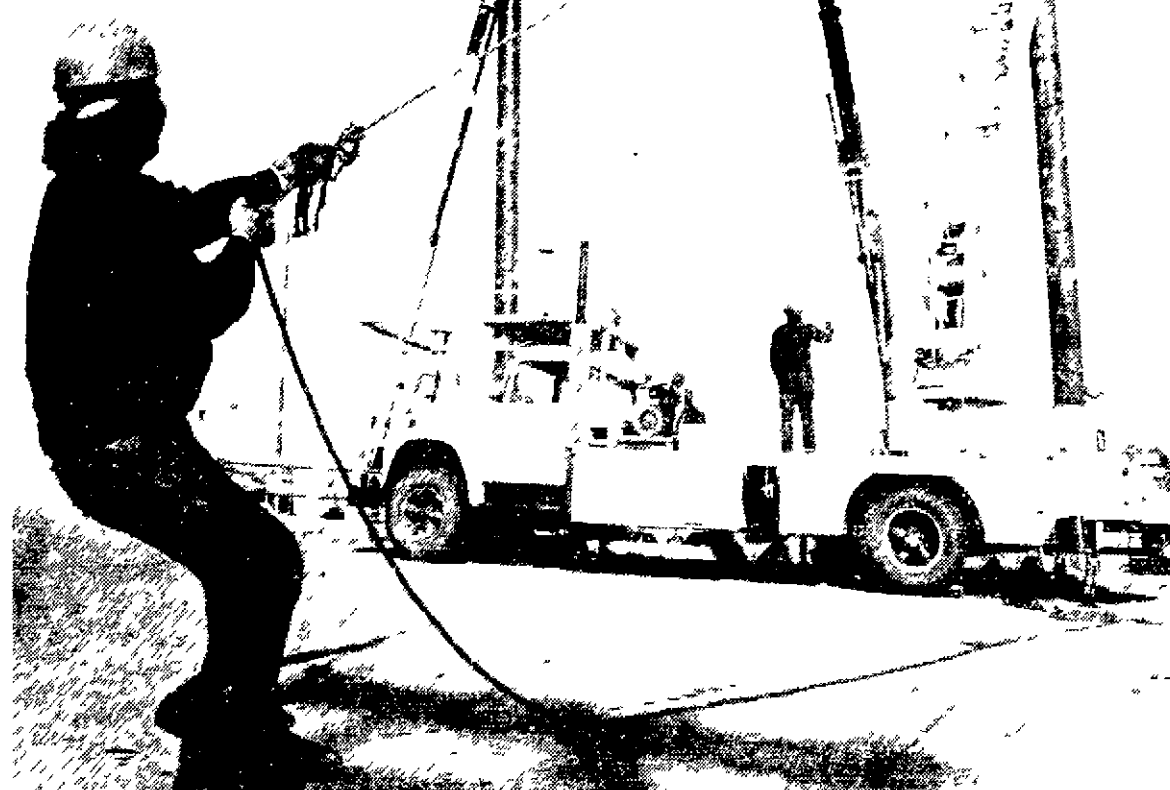

Light intensity of the sign, using 2,688 special energy-saving lamps for increased visibility, is photo electric controlled. The sign will operate around-the-clock daily and will be visible for several blocks, Schaffer said.

NBC international forum scheduled

An international business forum is planned Thursday at NBC Center, 13th and O Sts., by the National Bank of Commerce.

Speakers will include Clayton Yeutter, former U.S. Trade Representative, focusing on foreign market penetration and trade negotiations. Jerry Schmeil, Caterpillar Corp. most recently its West African sales manager, and Donald Hausman, North American tax director for Touche Ross International, speaking on boycotts and tax benefits of a Domestic International Sales Corp. (DISC).

STAFF PHOTOS BY HAROLD DREIMANIS

Action Adeline, which stands east of the Richman-Gordman store on Vine, is composed of 21,000 pounds of steel and sheet metal, some 47,520 feet of wiring, and required 40 yards of concrete for footings under its two steel columns.

Of interest to IRA, Keogh investors

Banks get nod on higher rates

Washington (AP) — Commercial banks are being authorized by the Federal Reserve Board to offer the same interest rates as thrift institutions for retirement deposits.

The bank regulatory agency, beginning July 6, will permit banks to offer persons with individual retirement accounts (IRA) up to 7.75% interest on deposits.

Savings and loan institutions and mutual savings banks have had the higher rate since the accounts became broadly available in 1975.

The rate is a .25% increase over the top interest rate that commercial banks can offer for time deposits of less than $5,000.

The thrift institutions are allowed to pay the higher interest on small deposits as part of U.S. policy to encourage savings flows to the home building industry since these institutions supply most home mortgages.

Individuals not covered by a pension or retirement plan can deposit up to $1,500 a year in IRA accounts and claim a tax deduction for the deposits. An earlier Keogh law authorized self-employed individuals to deposit up to $7,500 a year in a tax-deferred pension fund.

Under the plan, the tax advantage is lost if the money is withdrawn before the depositor reaches age 59½.

The Federal Reserve estimated that for savers contributing the maximum yearly amount to a Keogh plan for self-employed persons for 30 years, the increase in maximum interest available from a commercial bank would result in an additional $50,000 in the account by the time the person was ready to retire.

Fed chairman Arthur F. Burns said the action was needed to correct a competitive disadvantage which resulted in thrift institutions getting 65% of the deposits in individual retirement accounts as of Dec. 31.

The board acted despite protests by Senate Banking Committee Chairman William Proxmire (D-Wis.) and ranking committee members Thomas McIntire (D-N.H.) and Edward W. Brooke (R-Mass.).

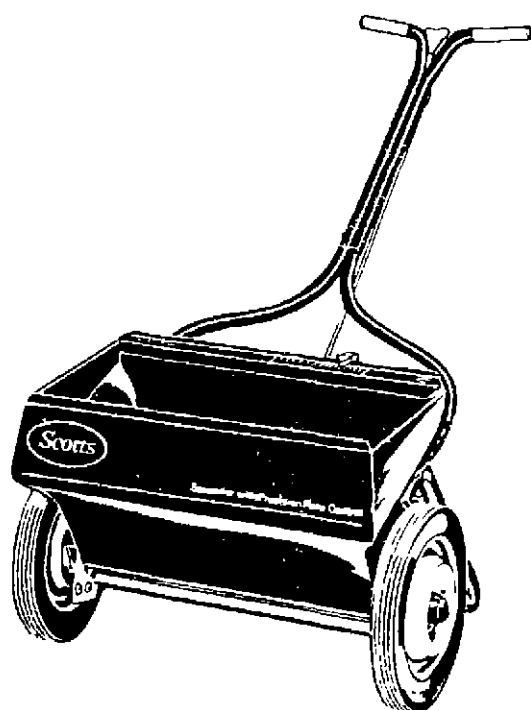

Burns noted that the changes does not become effective for 90 days and that Congress has a chance to reverse the board's action.

The U.S. League of Savings Association called on Congress to do just that: saving commercial banks were getting a smaller percentage of the deposits, not as a result of any competitive disadvantage but because they have not been marketing the program as aggressively as the thrift institutions.

Stock exchange issues tumble

NEW YORK (UPI) — With New York Stock Exchange issues falling to their lowest level in nearly 15 months at one point last week, analysts said Wall Street fears there are serious problems ahead in the nation's economy.

Inflation is the main worry right now, especially after the Labor Department reported the March Wholesale Price Index climbed at a 13.2 percent annual rate following a 10.8 percent jump in February.

Since consumer prices undoubtedly will show a large increase, investors will be watching anxiously next week to see what President Carter includes in his "anti-inflation" program. He has pledged not to call for controls, but investors are uneasy.

Wall Street is waiting with even more anxiety for the Carter administration to unveil its energy program, which is to be released April 20. The program will create a storm of controversy, not to mention economic pain for some.

Against this background, the Dow Jones industrial average fell 8.48 points to 918.88 Wednesday's close of 914.73 was the lowest since the average finished the day at 912.94 on Jan. 13, 1976.

The NYSE common stock index lost 0.48 to 53.94 and Standard & Poor's 500-stock index, containing some over-the-counter stocks, slipped 0.86 to 98.35.

Declines routed advances 1149 to 595 among the 2,048 issues crossing the composite tape.

Big Board volume for the four-day holiday week totaled 68,415,770 shares compared with 86,103,460 the previous week and 106,228,080 during the same week a year ago.

Composite volume of NYSE issues listed on all exchanges totaled 81,152,920 shares compared with 102,154,850 the previous week.

According to trial balloons let loose so far Carter's energy proposals would make some oil and gas cost more and would stretch federal price controls into state natural gas markets.

Also, there would be continued reliance on conventional reactors but a "hold on commercial use of the "breeder reactor" that involves plutonium, a fuel that can be made into bombs. Also, there would be a "hold" on reprocessing of spent nuclear fuels that could create plutonium.

Institutions are trying to figure out which stocks will be helped most by the energy program and which will be hurt the worst. This wild swings has produced some wild swings in the market and will create even more fluctuations as the program becomes known. Carter remained adamant about his economic stimulus program, saying he wouldn't trade his $50-for-everybody tax rebate for 30 water projects he has recommended scrubbing. He said he expects a $10 billion federal spending shortfall that should be returned to the people. Wall Street contends the program will be inflationary.

Consumer credit climbed $2.02 billion in February, the largest increase in four years. Auto sales rose a strong 14 percent last month, demonstrating consumer faith in the economy.

But observers noted consumers have carried the recovery trend for two years and that businesses have not stepped up capital spending to the level needed to sustain the economic rebound.

NeoClassic Jazz players doing their kind of music

By Holly Spence

Don't let the name of the NeoClassic Jazz Orchestra scare you. You'll recognize the material they play.

This brainchild of Lincoln attorney and CPA John Tavlin was born in 1975. But after six months "ended up playing lots of avant-garde charts."

Although Tavlin has nothing against avant-garde, it's not his kind of music. That musical direction was not what he had envisioned.

Conductor-sax man Bill Harshbarger commented that what the band was playing was "worthwhile music" but not what the band enjoyed or the audience related to.

"Everybody lost interest in the band," said Tavlin.

Jazz education

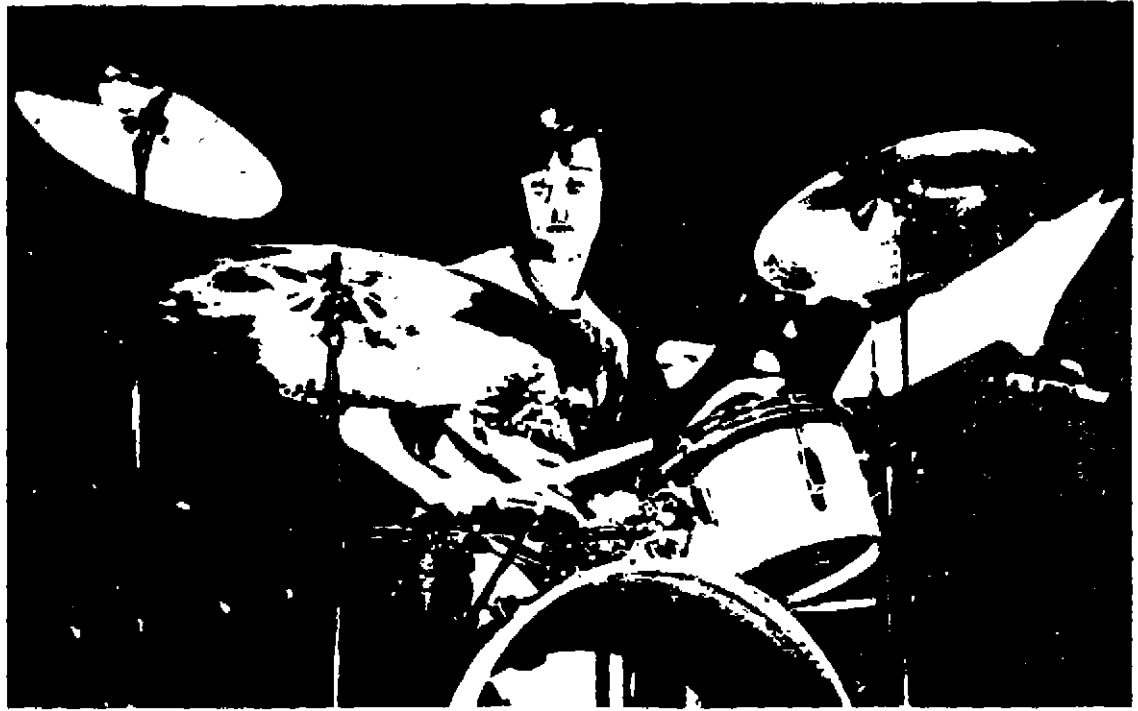

Now the NeoClassic Jazz Orchestra has regrouped and will present a concert at 8 p.m. Friday at the Lincoln Community Playhouse. It is open to the public.

The goal of the group, said Tavlin, is performance and jazz education — "the jazz equivalent to the Lincoln Symphony." Harshbarger, who coordinates student teachers of music in the Lincoln schools for the University of Nebraska Teachers College, said the jazz orchestra resembles the Lincoln Symphony in quality and administration and has many of the same instrumentalists.

Harshbarger added that no band in the country is playing more difficult music the NeoClassic and personnel wise, he thinks "we have some of Lincoln's best."

Both men admit, it's the type of music played that keeps the 20-member band together. Age has no bearing on the group because it ranges from 20's to 60's.

Tavlin said the sound is "close to Kenton." The NeoClassic also plays much Maynard Ferguson, Thad Jones & Mel Lewis, Woody Herman, Count Basie and charts from the North Texas State University Jazz Band.

Relationships formed

Harshbarger also said the NeoClassicists are developing contacts and relationships with top bands and arrangers around the country.

A Lincoln native and former York High School band director, Harshbarger thinks the city is "like a child developing in culture." He would like to see the NeoClassic Orchestra and the Lincoln Jazz Society, which has one year under its belt, work together. He said this is being negotiated for the next Society season.

The NeoClassic Jazz Orchestra's first public appearance was in an educational context as clinicians for Hospe Music. The band's members enjoy clinic involvement and according to Harshbarger "that's where it's at in jazz — in the schools."

The group plans to seek help from the Nebraska Arts Council for a tour of the state and is in the process of setting up jazz scholarships.

Support the group has received from the Lincoln Musicians Assn. has been "gratifying," said Tavlin. Both men added that local musicians have responded well to their musical effort.

"The band has matured so quickly that people are asking to get in," noted Harshbarger.

Private function wanted

Musicians in the group don't make a lot of money, but are trying to get more private functions.

The Friday concert will be performed on the Playhouse's thrust stage. This "very expressive band" will play "an extreme mix of music," said Harshbarger. "No one will have a chance to get bored at this concert."

Great Plains study center has 'ideal location' at UNL

By Helen Haggie

An idea becomes a reality this week with the launching of the Center for Great Plains Studies at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln. During the week a variety of educational and cultural activities will be presented on the campus.

The idea of the center emerged when Max Larsen, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, noticed the number of scholars on the campus who have lived in the Great Plains region all of their lives.

The region includes Nebraska, the Dakotas, Wyoming, Kansas, Montana, Colorado and Oklahoma and portions of Texas and New Mexico.

After more than a year of planning, the Center for Great Plains Studies has been esablished with enthusiastic approval from the university's board of regents at the December meeting.

Max Larsen

The governing board of the center includes Dean Larsen as acting director and seven faculty members who represent several disciplines of the college.

The University is an ideal location for such a center, Dean Larsen believes. Besides its location the University is the only institution in the region that has liberal arts, agriculture, economic and legal studies, as well as a State Historical Society and a university press on the same campus.

The center will concentrate on research concerning the area; it is hoped to add curricula with a possible major or minor in Great Plains studies, graduate work and help with curricula plans of high schools.

Other institutions working with the Center are the State Dept. of Education and the Indian art show adds Adena Pipe for Kansas City

By Jan Sack

For nine weeks (Saturday through June 19) Kansas City will look more like an Indian encampment than it has in 150 years. The reason: Sacred Circles, 2,000 years of North American Indian Art.

Sacred Circles, on display at the Nelson Gallery-Atkins Museum, comes to the United States after three months in London, where it was organized with the cooperation of the Arts Council of Great Britain as a tribute to the American bicentennial.

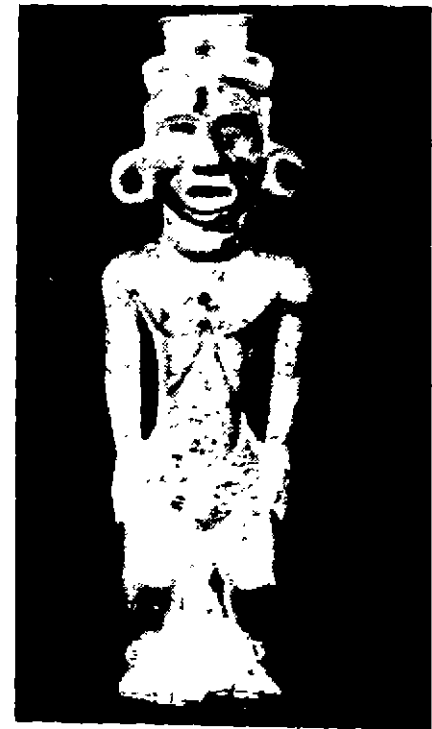

Its visit to Kansas City, the only other place it will be exhibited, results from the involvement of Ralph T. (Ted) Coe, director of Nelson Gallery, who spent four years searching out and organizing the show. Sponsors are the National Endowment for the Arts, National Endowment for the Humanities, the Missouri Arts Council and American Can. Co. Foundation.

The 850 objects will be returned to their 90 lenders in the United States, Canada, England, France, Denmark and West Germany at the conclusion of the show.

The showpiece in Kansas City undoubtedly is the Adena Pipe, considered the most important archaeological object ever found in the eastern U.S. The pipe is loaned by the Ohio Historical Center in Columbus.

Dating from 100 A.D., the Adena Pipe was unearthed at Chillicothe, Ohio, in 1901 during the excavation of a large mound. The mound was constructed about 2,000 years ago by Indian people of the Adena culture, a society inhabiting much of southern Ohio from 800 B.C. to 200 A.D.

Coe said the Adena Pipe is one of 38 new objects added since the London exhibition. He also said 21 objects shown in Great Britain were withdrawn.

The pipe is made from Ohio pipestone from quarries in the lower Scioto River Valley near Portsmouth. Its colors are the natural variations of the material and it does not appear to have been painted.

Many objects on display have not been seen in North America for centuries. Two shell and porcupine quill wampum belts, made by the Abenaki and Huron Indians in

Semkow will conduct St. Louis Orchestra

While the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra will be performing here April 22, 23 and 24 for the fifth consecutive year, the Lincoln audiences will be hearing the orchestra under its new leadership for the first time.

Internationally known Polish conductor Jerzy Semkow will conduct the concerts at 8 p.m. Friday and 3 p.m. Sunday while 31-year-old assistant conductor Gerhardt Zimmerman will lead the Saturday evening performance. All of the concerts, in the University of Nebraska's Kimball Hall, are open to the public but only limited numbers of tickets are still available.

Semkow is in his second year as music director and principal conductor of the St. Louis Orchestra but this will be his first conducting assignment in Lincoln. A native of Radomsko, Poland, Semkow has made frequent guest appearances with leading orchestras and opera companies. Assistant conductor Zimmerman is also music director and conductor of the St. Louis Symphony Youth Orchestra which received enthusiastic acclaim as the resident orchestra of the International Youth and Music Festival in Austria and Switzerland last July.

The St. Louisans' Friday evening program will include Rossini's Sonata #3 in C Major for Strings, Schumann's Symphony #4 in D Minor, and Wagner's Overture to Rienzi, Prelude to Acts 1 and 3 Lohengrin, and Prelude to Die Meistersinger.

Saturday evening's program calls for Mehul's Timoleon Overture, Mendelssohn's Reformation Symphony (replacing Bizet's Carmen Suite listed in early announcements), and Berlioz' Symphony Fantastique.

Selections for Sunday afternoon will be Symphony #101 ("The Clock") by Haydn, Les Preludes, Symphony Poem #3 by Liszt, and La Mer by Debussy.

The St. Louis Symphony Orchestra performances in Lincoln are made possible by support from the Nebraska Arts Council as well as by support to the Mid-America Arts Alliance from private and corporate contributors and grants from the National Endowment for the Arts.

Swing concert at Peru State

Peru — The Peru State College Swing Choir, "The Misty Blues," will present a free public concert on Thursday at 8 p.m. in the College Auditorium. Soloists are Liz Deason of Austin, Tex., Steve Medinger of Alma, Eldonna Hazen of Sterling and Cindy O'Banion of Falls City.

Jones-Lewis concert here Saturday night

The final concert of the Lincoln Jazz Society's premiere season will put the big band jazz sounds of the Thad Jones-Mel Lewis Orchestra onstage at 8 p.m. Saturday in Nebraska Wesleyan University's O'Donnell Auditorium. The concert is open to the public.

A leader of the new wave of big jazz, the band was founded in 1965. Jones and Lewis were veterans of big bands — Jones on flugelhorn with Count Basie and Lewis on drums with Stan Kenton, for instance. The new band got its start playing Monday nights at the Village Vanguard in New York and was an immediate sensation. Tours of the U.S. as well as Europe, Japan, the Far East and the Soviet Union followed, beginning in 1966.

The group has won the Down Beat best big band award every year since 1972 in addition to many honors. Jones' tune "A Child Is Born" has also become a modern classic.

The band likes to emphasize loyalty to the Ellington-Basie tradition as well as understanding the latest things on the music scene.

Friday concert by Collegium

The University of Nebraska-Lincoln Collegium Musicum will present its spring concert at 7 p.m. Friday in the great hall of the Sheldon Art Gallery.

The program includes a selection from the Gregorian Chant, medieval and renaissance dances, Machut's "Hoquetus David," French and German songs of the Renaissance and Thomas Weelkes' "Cries of London."

Four dancers from the university dance department will perform.

The Collegium Musicum is a group of students, faculty and persons related to the University School of Music. It was formed to give musicians an opportunity to perform music written before 1700. Another objective is to promote an awareness of early music.

Musicians in the group are Gay Kofil, Priscilla Parson, Ann Pettis and Margaret Seymour, all playing viola and Dan Bernstein, Quentin Faulkner, Bill Grant and Marlin Palasek, all playing recorders. Mally Kellar, tenor, will be joined in this concert by guest artists Judy Cole-Shannon and Donna Harler of the School of Music faculty.

Haggh recital of art songs

Soprano Hilde Haggh will present an art song recital at 8 p.m. Friday at the Sheldon Art Gallery Auditorium. Florence Kitch will be at the piano and David Kappy will assist on the French horn.

Mrs. Haggh will sing art songs of the romantic era and will feature Mendelssohn's

"Zwei Romanzen von Lord Byron," "Zwei Gesänge" by von Eichendorff and "Der Blumenkranz" by Th. Moore set to music by Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy. Also on the program will be Schubert's "Auf dem Strom" Op. 119 for voice, French horn and piano.

Soloists will be Vena Beth Genuchi, Beth Kerl, Diane Reicks, sopranos; Mollie Baldwin, mezzo-soprano; Mark Johnson, tenor, and Vaughn Fritts, baritone.

Church bells made of gold

Giron, Colombia (UPI) — Many people believe the most sonorous church bells in Colombia are to be found in the town of Giron — they are made of gold. Giron was founded by the Spanish in 1681 on the banks of the River of Gold, which still bears great quantities of this precious metal.

The Nebraska Wesleyan University Orchestra presents a free public concert at 8 p.m. Friday in O'Donnell Auditorium, 51st and Baldwin.

The orchestra, conducted by Robert Morrow, will open the program with Bach's Brandenburg Concerto (No. 4 in G). Soloists are Linda Bowen, violin, and Susie Wehrbein and Rachel Bachenberg, flutes.

The program includes music based on folk melodies of several countries adapted for contemporary orchestral instruments. In this group are the "Rumanian Folk Dances" by Bela Bartok, "John Jacob Niles Suite" by Weldon Hart, "Variations on a Shaker Melody" by Aaron Copland, and "Fantasia on 'Greensleeves'" and "English Folk Song Suite" by Ralph Vaughan Williams.

Schenk to play here Wednesday

A free mini-concert, an extension of the Lenten concert series, will feature organist Joseph Schenk from 12:10 to 12:35 p.m. Wednesday at First-Plymouth Congregational Church, 20th and D.

Schenk, former student with Dr. George Ritchie at the University of Nebraska School of Music, now is studying with Catharine Crozier in San Diego, Calif. He is organist and choirmaster at St. Peter's Episcopal Church in Del Mar, near San Diego.

He will play the works of Bach, Brahms and Messiaen Wednesday.

The Romeros Dance workshop June 13-July 1 on UNL campus play here on Saturday

The Romeros, described as the Spanish "royal family of guitar", will appear for one performance Saturday at 8 p.m. at Kimball Hall, 11th and R.

The quartet, which Time magazine has called "indisputably the best guitar ensemble around," is comprised of Celedonio Romero and his three sons — Celin, Pepe and Angel. Since the family left Spain in 1958 its members have played over 1,500 concerts in the U.S. and abroad. All four Romeros are also successful solo recitalists, and Celin and Pepe present joint recitals of duets.

In 1967 the quartet commissioned Spanish composer Joaquin Rodrigo to write a concerto for four guitars and orchestra. The great success of "Concierto Andaluz" led to a recording with the San Antonio Symphony. Also composed by Joaquin for the Romeros in 1973 is "Concierto Madrigal" for two guitars. A new "Concierto Sacra" was composed for Celedonio Romero by Father Francisco de Madina, as well as another for him by the noted Spanish composer, Torroba. De Madina has also composed "Concierto Flamenco" for Pepe Romero.

The Romeros' Lincoln program will include several works by Spanish composers and one composed by Celedonio Romero.

Different shape

The average African pygmy at birth is heavier, although shorter, than the average American baby.

Traditionally, dance students at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln and Nebraska high schools have had to leave the state to attend dance workshops.

This year, however, dancers will be coming here.

The workshop, a first for Nebraska and featuring first-rate faculty such as Fred Mathews and Michael Maule, will be June 13-July 1 at the university. It is being sponsored by the Department of Physical Education and Recreation (PER), with Marie Sanwick, associate professor of PER, as coordinator.

Mathews was a soloist with the Jose Limon company until last year. Most recently he appeared as a guest artist with "Nureyev and Friends" at the London Coliseum. A choreographer also, Mathews presently is on the faculty at New York University.

Maule retired in 1968 after a career as one of America's foremost classical dancers. He partnered almost all the principal ballerinas of his time. He was a leading dancer with the New York City Ballet, premier danseur of the Metropolitan Opera Ballet. He has taught at the Robert Joffrey School and in the American Ballet Theatre School in New York. He originated and, until 1976, directed the National Academy of Dance.

The Nebraska workshop, according to Prof. Sanwick, will have two major programs — dance performance and dance for children. The dance performance section will provide instruction in modern, jazz, ballet and folk dance on several skill levels. Dance for children will provide instruction on the teaching and development of dance programs for children.

The workshop is intended for college students of dance, graduate or undergraduate, and for the elementary or secondary school teacher who wishes to become better prepared either in performing or teaching.

Inquiries should be sent to "Dance," 220 Mable Lee Hall, University of Nebraska-Lincoln, Lincoln, Nebraska 68588.

'Beaver Fever' novelty record puts Lincolmites on truck radios

By Bart Becker

Frank Green doesn't own a CB, but Jim Morgan has five of them.

That was all the background the duo needed to cut a novelty record that is being played on so-called truckers' radio stations nationwide and gathering more than casual interest in the industry trade publications.

Over a late night hamburger a few weeks ago Morgan and Green penned "C.B. Beaver Fever." Here briefly, is the story, the 4 1/2-minute-long song tells.

A trucker is on the lonely road when the voice of a woman (beaver, in CB lingo) comes on the open channel inviting any and all weary travelers to her place. He thinks it sounds like a great idea and follows the directions she gives.

When he gets there it turns out a lot of other lonely drivers had the same idea since eight-wheelers are lined up around the block.

Then comes the punch line.

It dawns on the trucker that all the semis are lined up at his own house and "I knew it wasn't my birthday," he says abashedly. "That was last month."

Morgan, who has a syndicated radio interview show, and Green, an engineer at Lincoln's W W Sound Studios, cut the record shortly thereafter. Morgan talked the lyrics in a fast-paced growl. The Midwest Ramblers provided the backing music with the members of Tunesmith singing and Linda Swanson as the Beaver.

Then they took the record to Nashville to talk with record companies. The music business people got a kick out of both the story line and the lyrics.

A deal was struck with Monument Records (the contract calls for three single records and an album) and "C.B. Beaver Fever" by Jimmy "Jammer" Morgan was released about a month ago.

The record has appeared on the "recommended for play" lists of Cashbox and Record World magazines, trade publications of the music industry. It is being played on a number of stations across the country. Sales have been modest so far but Morgan said it takes about six weeks for sales of a new record to get really under way.

Both the Lincolmites are happy about the apparent success of their venture, particularly since they had thought CB novelty songs were probably dead. And there has been an unexpected reaction to the record.

Morgan and Green thought the record would appeal to male truckers and CBers. Instead it is reportedly being heavily requested by women, who apparently identify with the Beaver as an independent soul.

Quebec, were lent by Chartres Cathedral, where French missionaries sent them in 1678 and 1699.

On loan from Linden Museum in Stuttgart, Germany, is a painted buffalo hide collected by Prince Maximilian during his trek up the Missouri River in 1833. A Northwest Coast mask representing a warrior was collected by Capt. James Cook on his third voyage to the Pacific in 1776-80. It is on loan from the British Museum.

Bev Rosenberg, assistant project director, said Sacred Circles is 2 1/2 times larger than the Chinese archaeological exhibition at Nelson two years ago. She said it will take a minimum of two hours to view the exhibit and audio guides are available. Some 300,000 people are expected during the nine-week show.

Ms. Rosenberg said that in addition to the exhibit, there will be on-going performing arts groups. Indians from all over the nation will be performing dances, singing, wood carving, basket weaving, ivory carving and other crafts in Kirkwood Hall.

She said catalogs, posters and books on Indian art will be available at the gallery as well as from Indian art dealers in the city.

Ms. Rosenberg suggested advance group bookings for Sacred Circles to avoid the expected long waits. Groups must have a minimum of 25 members and indicate preferred dates and times in the initial application. School and university groups will receive preference. Inquiries for group tours should be made to Sacred Circles Office, Nelson Gallery-Atkins Museum, 4525 Oak St., Kansas City, Mo. 64111.

Concordia displays sculptures

Seward — Works of 11 Nebraskan sculptors will be on display on the Concordia College campus here April 12-23 for the Nebraska Sculpture Installation.

Artists represented in the show are Sidney Buchanan, art instructor at the University of Nebraska Omaha (UNO), Nick Chiburis art instructor at Iowa Western Community College in Council Bluffs, Gary Coulter head of the art department at Hastings College, Mike Fitzsimmons, a UNO student, Robert Hower, UNO instructor of art, Ted Long full time sculptor at North Platte, Fr. Lee Lubbers, S.J. art teacher at Omaha's Creighton University, Jim Olsen art teacher at Dana College, Blair Ray Replogle, head of the sculpture program at Wayne State College, and Doug Ross and Patrick Rowan, art instructors at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

This is our biggest show of the year, said Dick Wegmann, director of Concordia's Koenig Art Gallery. "The idea stemmed from the Interstate 80 sculpture and many people's question as to why a Nebraskan was not selected as the artist. So, we're getting several Nebraskan sculptors together to view their work."

Throughout the show, one piece of work by each artist will be displayed in Koenig Gallery and other pieces will be scattered over the area — in the Campus Center, Music Center and other buildings. A map of locations will be available.

Sponsored in part by the Seward Arts Council and financed by the Jones Bank and the Cattle Bank, the show will also reach downtown Seward. Sculptures will be displayed in the lobbies of the two banks.

The artists were selected on the basis of the quality and variety of their work, Wegmann said. Composition materials include welded aluminum, I-beam steel, resin and wood, cast aluminum and bronze combination, steel and plexiglass, painted wood, cast acrylic plastic, wall relief of plaster and wood, canvas and galvanized heating pipe.

Sculpture styles will range from western bronzes and figurative works to abstract forms.

Limbo recital

Jane Limbo of Oakdale will present her senior piano recital at Nebraska Wesleyan University's O'Donnell Auditorium at 8 p.m. Tuesday. She is a student of NWU instructor Beth Miller Harrod. She also studied piano with Arne Sorensen, Norfolk, for 13 years. Her program includes works by Bach, Beethoven, Ginastera, Chopin and Liszt.

Whittier pioneered junior high level vocational training

By Walter R. Meier
Special Contributor

Whittier Junior High School symbolizes a crucial stage in the development of public education. With roots extending back to the first decade of this century, Whittier was Lincoln's first "3" in the 6-3-3 school system.

The aim of the first "3" or junior high as interpreted in the 1920s at Whittier was to further new movements toward vocational domestic and physical education.

Two forces gave impetus to new trends: communities were demanding a more practical system of instruction and educators were wanting to keep children in school.

On Jan. 2, 1916, the Nebraska State Journal quoted a professor Leavitt of Chicago University as saying, "Our revised ideal will require that we educate the boy for work on the farm and in the shop, but that we so educate him that he will make a better farmer and will develop a richer farm life, or will demand a better shop and conditions more favorable to progress and a reasonable enjoyment of his work and his leisure."

Nine years earlier, Lincoln Public Schools Supt. W. L. Stephens and the Lincoln Board of Education had expressed a desire to get manual training and cooking courses in all public schools. Often this was a physical impossibility because existing buildings had not been designed for shops and kitchens. Classrooms which might be converted were in short supply. But rooms in the McKinley and Prescott schools already had been converted. So the administrators decided to send children from other schools there for training.

In those days, courses in manual training and cooking were rather primitive. A room with a bench and some woodworking hand tools was a shop. A room with a gas stove and a few pots and pans was a kitchen. Classes were taught by existing personnel trained for teaching the three R's, or by people with practical experience.

Supt. Stephens' 1907 dream began to take shape here in 1915 when classes began in the new Lincoln High School. Few, if any, high schools in the country surpassed this one in grandeur and equipment. It had rooms specifically designed for every known subject, including manual training (woodworking, drafting and printing) for boys, domestic science (cooking, meal planning, food preservation, nutrition and dietetics) for girls and physical education for both. It was complete in every detail and arrangement — or so the designers thought.

In 1921, the grand idea emerged in new elementary schools. Hartley opened that year. It had a room equipped for woodworking but offered no formal classwork.

Not until 1923 was the 1907 dream really fulfilled. On a September morning that year, a chorus of bells called students to order in a new Whittier Junior High School. The 6-3-3 educational system was by then on a firm and permanent foundation. Industrial arts, domestic subjects and physical education were fixed solidly into the curriculum of the Lincoln Public Schools.

Whittier had a separate building housing six spacious, modern, well-equipped, individual shops: woodworking, printing, drafting, electrical, metalworking and automobile repairing. An enclosed passageway connected the shop building to the main school.

The main building included a modern suite for teaching domestic arts, domestic science and home economics, two kitchens, a dining room, model bedroom, sewing room and laundry.

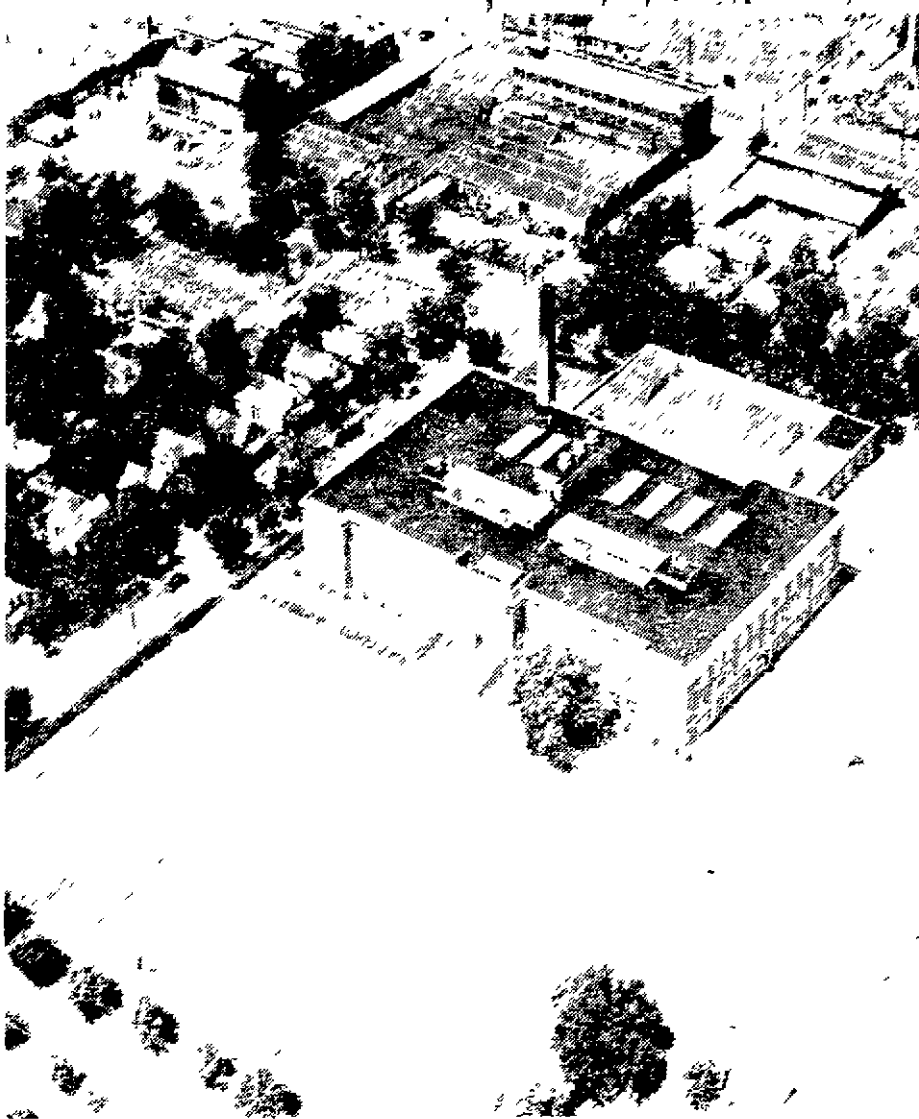

The main building also housed a gymnasium large enough for spectator sports. It was divided for simultaneous boys and girls physical education classes with a foldaway partition. The thick, oak, full-height partition was drawn back for sports events. Bleachers which were set up along each side and a balcony located at one end provided adequate seating for spectators.

Only eight years prior to formalizing Whittier building plans, the designers of Lincoln High had not foreseen the advent of spectator sports. Consequently, the LHS basketball team was obliged to play its games in the Whittier gym.

It was at Whittier that the Tom and Mildred Ross drama evolved. These lovely people were attracted to Lincoln by the premium wages being offered to qualified industrial arts and physical education teachers. Tom had received normal training at Stout Institute, a unique industrial arts school at Menomonie, Wis. Mildred's normal training had been at the New Haven School of Gymnastics, a division of Arnold College in New Haven, Conn.

They met at Whittier. They fell in love with each other and the school. And all three were married "until death do us part." Tom and Mildred earned their B.S. and M.S. degrees while teaching. And they continued to teach at Whittier until their retirement six years ago.

The Rosses and Whittier are one and the same to many former students. Lincoln architect Bill Schlaebitz said, "My architectural career began at Whittier. In fact, the instruction and encouragement given me by Mr. Ross had a tremendous effect upon my whole life. I am forever grateful to him."

Earl Lampshire, Lincoln dentist, said, "I have thanked Mr. Ross many times for what he did for me. This man was not just a teacher; he was a motivator. With only the knowledge I gained at Whittier, I designed my own home, a medical-dental center and pools for a swimming pool business I once owned."

The Ross phenomenon is representative of the entire Whittier staff and administration. Jim Wittstruck, a Whittier graduate who returned there to teach, said, "The names Culler and Whittier are synonymous. Mr. Culler opened the doors in 1923 and made Whittier what it became."

Under Principal C. L. Culler, old programs were improved upon and new ones instituted. People came from all over the world to study the Whittier building and the training methods used there.

Culler promoted student government and civic pride to the fullest. But he stood for order and discipline. It has been said there may have been chaos at Whittier, but at least it was orderly chaos.

When students changed classrooms they marched single file down the hallways. Teachers were strategically stationed to maintain order and keep the lines moving. And up to 1,320 students changed classrooms in three minutes. After the Culler system was abandoned, it began taking 10 minutes to transfer a reduced population of 300 students.

Whittier history would not be complete without mentioning the German-Russian students from the "north bottoms." In the words of Tom Ross, "These people were the salt of the earth."

The German-Russian families contracted to tend beet fields in the upper Platte valley. The children left school a month early in the spring and returned a month late in the fall. But their parents saw that lessons were learned — these parents wanted their children to live better lives as adults.

The good and prosperous lives they now live speaks to the wisdom of their parents.

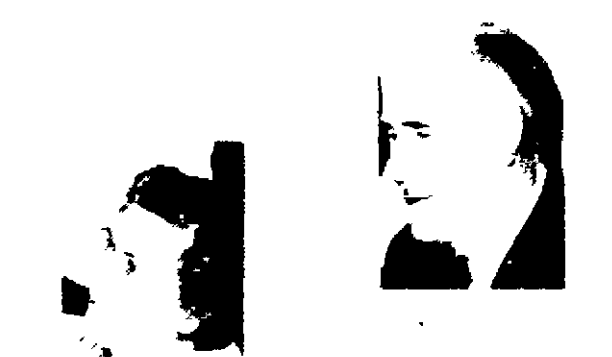

One banner waved by Whittier alumni announces, "Our school has produced more outstanding athletes than any other junior high." These may be fighting words. Yet the list of famous athletes that came from Whittier and went on to glory at Lincoln High and the University of Nebraska is long. Two names that come to mind are George Sauer and Bernie Masterson.

Banners also might be waved for former students who made good use of their industrial and homemaking training at Whittier. For some reason, these programs did not take root to the same degree at other Lincoln schools. Educators attribute this condition to the environment.

The Whittier district was inhabited by a mixture of people from all walks of life. Half of the children had no intention of attending college. This gave impetus to strong industrial and homemaking programs. And the strong programs encouraged college-bound students also to want to work with their hands.

At other schools, student bodies were more predominantly college oriented or were too small to justify strong comprehensive programs. This hypothesis was neatly summed up by Tom Ross, "Students at other schools just didn't put their hearts into the programs."

Like man's landing on the moon, the Whittier facilities — designed for meeting early 20th century ideals — represented "one giant leap for mankind."

Mexico considering restoration of ruins

Mexico City (UPI) — Mexico is considering investing $35 million on restoring the ruins of more than a dozen Mayan cities and ceremonial centers in Southeastern Mexico.

One site expected to benefit from the government's restoration plan is Palenque, where 25 years ago archaeologists found one of the outstanding tombs in the New World. Sunk in the heart of an 80-foot high pyramid, the tomb held the remains of what archaeologists believed was a deified priest-king.

It took them more than three years to reach the tomb.

According to Mexican archaeologist Alberto Ruz, the find underscored the brilliance of the Mayas, who developed the most impressive pre-Columbian civilization known to modern man.

Culture declines

Accomplished astronomers and mathematicians, the deeply religious Mayans extended their territory over 125,000 square miles from Mexico's Yucatan Peninsula to Honduras. Their declining culture finally collapsed under the 16th Century Spanish invasion.

They built the pyramid during their classic period about 300 to 900 A.D. It towers above the steaming jungle in Chiapas State, one of the world's most humid regions.

Archaeologists investigating the temple standing on top of the pyramid uncovered a stairway leading into the pyramid in 1949. The stairway had been filled with rubble. By digging for more than a year, explorers reached the foot of the stairs and found a passage sealed by a huge stone.

Beside the stone was a hole filled with jade earrings, beads and a pearl. The stone was removed and the explorers discovered the remains of five or six young men apparently sacrificed as guards.

Crypt revealed

Nearby, the explorers saw a perfectly fitted triangular slab which, when removed, revealed a crypt. They were 80 feet below the pyramid's peak by then and five feet below ground level.

Inside the crypt was a stone coffin 10 feet long, seven feet wide and covered by a lavishly sculptured stone lid. When the lid was lifted, the explorers discovered a highly polished stone slab which fitted the coffin with absolute precision.

Beneath the stone, when it was raised in June 1952, the archaeologists found the reason for it all. The skeleton of a tall man, between 40 and 50 years old and bedecked in jade ornaments.

The old DeWitt Sales Barn site of agricultural sales shows of all kinds and revival meetings was being torn down in 1957 when this photograph was taken. The building was removed to make room for expansion of the Peterson Wrench Company manufacturer of tools sold around the world. Constructed shortly after World War I, the sales barn had an unusual support system that was of interest to carpenters throughout the years.

Can TV produce glamor queens?

By Frank Swertlow

(c) 1977 Chicago Sun Times

The big screen of Hollywood always had its sirens Rita Hayworth, Marilyn Monroe and Elizabeth Taylor. When they were not on film, theater marquees sparkled with the likes of Ava Gardner, Grace Kelly and Lana Turner.

They were the women of dreams. Sexy, of course, but always with that touch of mystery, exotic, charming, elegant.

Glamor is what they had.

When it came to television, the small-screen personalities could not compare with the larger-than-life film actors. Lucille Ball was a star, but she did not shine with the luster of a movie queen. Nor did Mary Tyler Moore, Carol Burnett or any other female on the air. It's difficult to be glamorous when you are only six inches tall.

Recently, however, television seems to be heading for a new age. Glamor is back, and the key, as in the old days of Hollywood, is sexually appealing women — only this time they are expertly packaged for television. ABC is the trailblazer. Let's take a look.

• Obviously, Farrah Fawcett-Mayors, Kate Jackson and Jaclyn Smith of "Charlie's Angels" are the new queen of TV glamor.

All of the Angels may be equal, but frosty-maned Farrah is a little more equal than the others. She already has been dubbed the new Marilyn Monroe No. 1, not in the swimsuit category, but as a light comedienne. She is a human meringue, a soufflé that never flops. While the darker-tressed Ms. Jackson and Ms. Smith are more sultry and perhaps more passionate-looking, Ms. Fawcett-Mayors is above it all, more gossamer, like a kiss that doesn't leave a bad taste.

Fast on the heels of the Angels are the athletes on the air. Linda Carter, Wonder Woman, and Lindsay Wagner of Bionic Woman fame. These superwomen dominate the men around them, but their sexy wholesomeness and femininity overcome the harsher tones of women's lib.

Las Vegas is the site for Blansky's Beauties. It's too early to tell who will be the most beautiful Beauty, but given a few more weeks, one will emerge from the chorus line.

• Stefanie Powers, the feather in "The Feather and Father Gang," seems to have many qualities of an Ava Gardner or a Cyd Charisse: torrid on the outside, soft on the inside. Ms. Powers, once known as the "Girl from U.N.C.L.E.," provides viewers with a coy sexiness that does not offend even the criminals she captures on her show.

And, finally, there's Kim Basinger, the cat in "Dog and Cat." She may emerge as the most sensual actress on the air. She is the latest version of the damsel in distress.

"Women in feature roles on TV are more glamorous than in the past," said Steve Gentry, ABC West Coast programming chief. "Charlie's Angels is the epitome of this."

But Gentry noted that these shows appeal not only to men but also to women. "Women enjoy the fashions," he said, "and the hair styles."

Kim Basinger, Gentry added, typifies the fashion-conscious woman who "dresses in a very contemporary style. Before, the thing to do was to dress down. Today, people dress up and go out." Gentry said the key to the new glamor is "entertainment with a capital E. Viewers want to be taken to attractive places by attractive people. They want romance, adventure. The cynicism of the movie heroes of five years ago is gone."

The reason he said, is that the nation wants to forget the turmoil of the last decade. The new glamor, he said, "helps put these things behind us so we can look for something more optimistic in life."

CBS gives Hughes life two nights

"The Amazing Howard Hughes," a four-hours in two nights special tracing the life of one of the world's most wealthy and mysterious men, is being telecast this week on CBS.

The CBS release of the Hughes special is 8-10 p.m. Wednesday and Thursday, which is when it will be seen on Omaha's WOWT. However, Lincoln-Grand Island stations KOLN-KGIN (10-11) will delay the Hughes programs 24 hours to the 6-10 p.m. periods on Thursday and Friday. On Wednesday KOLN-KGIN carry Lawrence Welk at 8 p.m. and "Gunsmoke" reruns at 9 p.m.

CBS says the special, an EMI Television Productions, Inc., production with Roger Gimbel as executive producer, is based on the book "Howard the Amazing Mr. Hughes" by Noah Dietrich, longtime associate of the reclusive Hughes, and Bob Thomas, veteran Hollywood correspondent for the Associated Press. In starring roles are Tommy Lee Jones as Hughes and El Flanders as Dietrich.

The first part of the four-hour special follows Hughes from his takeover of the Hughes Tool Co. when he was 18 to the start of his famous record breaking world flight in 1938. During this period, he hired Dietrich to oversee his rapidly expanding business ventures while he pursued his interests in aviation, golf, film making and Hollywood starlets.

The triumphs and tragedies of Hughes's middle and final years are examined in the concluding installment. This period's events include Hughes' critical injury in a plane crash and his involvement in U.S. Senate probe pertaining to war profits. As years follow, Hughes's behavior changes radically. He isolates himself from others and develops a phobia about germs, but his business activities continue until his death a year ago.

Jones is the young star of "Jackson County Jail" and the soon-to-be released "Rolling Thunder." His television credits include guest appearances on "Baretta" and "Charlie's Angels."

Flanders recently won acclaim for his performance in the one-man television special "Harry S. Truman Plain Speaking."

Roles wait for ex-Omahan Nolte to accept

By Guy Flatley
(c) 1977 New York Times

New York — Nick Nolte may be nothing more than your ordinary, everyday, average blend of Marlon Brando and Robert Redford. Nevertheless, he was Hollywood moguls competing frantically for his services, thanks to his charismatic, star-making performance last season as the rebellious kid brother in television's "Rich Man, Poor Man."

By this time next year, his blond, blue-eyed, slightly sulken good looks are apt to be familiar to even those movie purists who would sooner face the pillory than sit home watching a commercials-pocked miniseries. The 36-year-old actor will be seen as a brazen adventurer in "The Deep," scheduled for June release. It's Peter Yates's film of the Peter Benchley best seller. And Nolte is tangling with heavy drugs and Tuesday Weld in the role of the hardened Vietnam veteran in Karel Reisz's "The Dog Soldiers."

Although he is expected to emerge from "The Deep" as a superstar, all was not smooth sailing in Bermuda, where about one-third of the film was shot underwater. "At first, he didn't know how to communicate emotion," he recalled. "Everything had to be done in pantomime. I was very skeptical about the outcome of the movie, because we began without a completed script. But Robert Shaw and I worked together on developing our characters, making them valid. Robert did most of the writing and I did a lot of the talking."

Judging from reports trickling back from Bermuda, the two unflaggingly energetic actors also worked overtime at developing their off-screen characters. Their late-night liquid revelries and boyish pranks sprang into instant legend among the flabbergasted locals and visiting journalists. "I guess outsiders couldn't help wondering what they had walked into," Nolte said, sounding the soul of sobriety.

Nolte, a husky athlete who was the class jock in Omaha before it dawned on him that he had the makings of a matinee idol, is one of Hollywood's most dedicated performers, having served a 10-year apprenticeship in regional theater. "This superstar stuff is fine on the business level because it puts an actor in a spot where he can afford to do the kind of material to which he can make a commitment, but the dangerous side of it is that all the glamour and constant recognition have a tendency to corrupt, to throw things out of perspective. The thing I really enjoy, the thing that truly fascinates me is the process of acting."

When he stars in Arthur Hiller's "Six Weeks," Nolte will enjoy the fascinating company of two Oscar-winning actresses, one a venerated veteran, the other a peppy upstart. He'll play a crusading politician who wins the vote of Tatum O'Neal — a tough-spirited, cancer-stricken tot — for the office of new husband to her socialite mom, Audrey Hepburn. "The age difference between Audrey and me is important. I'm a senator who decides to give up on politics because of all the corruption I see around me, but the audience might have a hard time accepting that, because I'm so young and haven't put enough time into my work. That's why it's good that Audrey is older — the woman she plays has had the benefit of experience and is able to validate my ideas."

By Irv Kupcinet

(c) 1977 Chicago Sun-Times

Hollywood — the 49th annual Oscar awards may be history, but controversy is still raging in Never-Never Land over whether Bill Friedkin, as producer, brought a new and improved look to the Oscar show or merely loused up old look.

The traditionalists are criticizing Friedkin's efforts while younger members of the profession are applauding him for giving the daddy of all awards shows a more contemporary appearance. Friedkin was responsible for producing and staging the show, but not for the material delivered by some of the comedians, which admittedly was below par.

Whatever the effects of Friedkin's efforts this year, they will not be evident in '78, when the Motion Picture Academy celebrates Oscar's 50th birthday. The show next year will drip with sentimentality and glamor, with a mix of that old-time religion in which movie stars are treated as mortal gods. The 50th an-

The Oscar telecast took a nosedive in the Nielsens with a 31 rating. That's down from a 35.5 last year.

Robert Young has embarked on an interesting project — an NBC-TV 90-minute special dealing with a 10th-year reunion of the original cast of one of TV's more popular shows, "Father Knows Best." Only Jane Wyatt, who portrayed Young's wife in the series, still is in the profession. The three youngsters on the show, now young adults — Billy Gray, Eleanor Donahue and Lauren Chapin — have found happiness in other pursuits.

Back to 'Dolly'

Carol Channing will resume in "Hello, Dolly!" on June 24 in Houston. That's the same city and ten years to the date that she made her last appearance in "Dolly."

In addition to starring with Sally Fields in "Heroes" at Universal, Winkler has signed to star in a comedy love story to be directed by Carl Reiner at Paramount Pictures.

The film, as yet untitled, will feature Winkler as a zany young man who falls in love and leaves college to pursue his dream of stardom.

Dr. Murray will play Bach work

He notes the first public performance of the work was Berkeley, Calif., last summer.

"The work needs two harpsichords and since we have only one here, I taped the music for one and will be playing the music for the second with the tape," Murray says.

Lafayette dollar outside rules

- By Leon Lindheim
Special Writer
- The United States Lafayette dollar is unique in several ways
- It is the only commemorative dollar-silver coin struck by the mint.
 - Although dated 1900 it was struck in 1977 contrary to Treasury Dept. regulations.
 - It read "Lafayette Dollar" instead of "One Dollar" as required by law.
 - The U.S. government donated the coins used something never done before or with a commemorative issue.
 - It was the first U.S. coin to bear the portrait of an ex-President (George Washington).

Products Reach Consumers Through Marketing

By Dr. Arthur Kraft
Professor, Management, UNL
College of Business Administration
SUN Faculty Consultant

Marketing represents the performance of business activities as they relate to the flow of goods and services from producer to consumer. A consumer is any organization or individual who purchases and uses goods and services.

There are two classifications of consumers: ultimate and industrial.

The ultimate consumer includes those individuals who purchase goods and services for their own use. This occurs when a housewife buys groceries and clothing for herself and members of her family.

An industrial consumer purchases goods and services to assist in making a profit or satisfying a social need. This occurs when a firm purchases a truck to deliver its goods and services, when a steel company buys coal or iron ore, and when a government agency rents a computer to assist in its record keeping.

Organizations must be aware of the sources of supply for the goods and services they use and the conditions under which they market their goods and services.

In addition they must determine where they can secure the resources they need at the lowest possible prices, the conditions which determine this favorable price, and the factors which influence the consumer demand for the firm's output.

For these reasons firms must conduct market research studies to obtain information about their products and the goods they use as inputs in the production process. The organization may have its own market research staff to gather this information or it may hire an outside firm to carry out these activities.

If firms are to be successful in reaching the consumer, they should recognize that the consumer needs to be supplied with information about the goods and services they wish to purchase.

The ultimate consumer is a large source of demand for the output of many firms. Since there are many types of goods that consumers purchase, the organization must be aware of these goods and the consumers' demand for such products.

First, there are convenience goods which the consumer buys in small quantities without giving much thought. These goods usually have a low price attached to them and are sold on a large volume basis. Convenience items include groceries, gasoline, newspapers, and candy.

Specialty goods represent those items which consumers are especially interested in purchasing. Such goods usually command a high price and are sold at special outlets. Specialty items may be automobiles, luxury items, and any other product that requires consumer loyalty.

Shopping goods are those items that are purchased after the consumer has made extensive comparison among various items. The basis of comparison includes factors such as price, style, and quality. These may include goods such as clothing, furniture, and carpeting.

MARKETING ACTIVITIES

People who market goods and services never like to operate under uncertainty. They wish to have as much information available as possible. This way they can better predict the response of the consumer to changes in the price of their goods relative to those of their competitors, shifts in consumer demand, and changes in the general state of the economy.

Financing is an important function because firms may need to store goods as inventory to meet potential demand. They may also have to extend credit to their customers. If these operations are to be carried out, the firm must have a source of funds.

When goods are placed in inventory, the firm not only has a cost associated with the direct storage of the items, but it also has an opportunity cost associated with these goods.

The firm invests money in the purchase or manufacture of goods which it could have used for an alternative investment.

Product planning has become an important function in recent years because of the large number of widely differentiated goods and services being offered to consumers. A firm must carefully determine the particular consumer needs it wishes to satisfy and then develop a product that will satisfy these needs.

In addition, the firm must determine the process that will be used to produce the goods, the amount that will be produced, and the question of whether the product will be modified over a period of time.

The buyer first determines the needs to be satisfied and then selects the type of good or service that will satisfy such needs. Once this is accomplished, the buyer will determine a source of supply from which the good or service may be purchased at the best possible price.

Standardization occurs in the marketing process when certain physical characteristics are uniformly established for a group of products. When you purchase a television set, it has a certain voltage that will permit its use in your home.

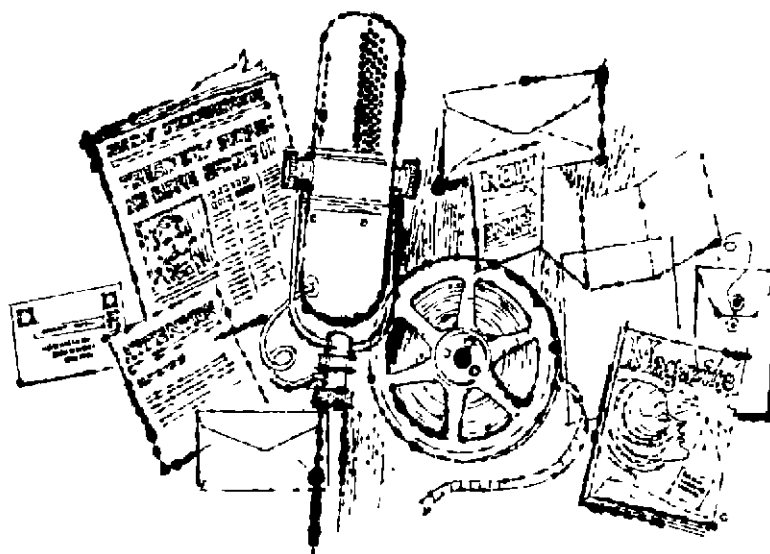

The prices charged for goods and services are usually set so as to maximize profits. This will involve consideration of the cost of production and the potential demand.

In addition, the organization must determine the response on the part of the consumer to changes in price. Will an increase in the price result in a substantial decline in the demand for the product or will demand remain relatively stable? Consideration must also be given to the pricing policies of the competition.

Storage of goods arises when there is a time lag between the production of the goods and their consumption. This occurs when goods are placed into inventory.

Inventory could be created to alleviate a seasonal problem. For instance, when goods are produced seasonally, such as during the summer, but consumed throughout the entire year, they must be placed in storage so they are available to satisfy demand.

All individuals engaged in the marketing of goods and services must bear a certain amount of risk. The demand for a product could decline suddenly and cause the firm to be in a severe inventory position if it has a large number of goods in storage with few sales prospects.

Goods stored in inventory could physically deteriorate or become obsolete with age. Deterioration is quite common with perishable foods. Obsolescence often occurs with clothing items when they are stored for more than one season.

ADVERTISING

Selling is one of the most important marketing functions. It focuses on locating customers, acquainting customers with the procedures for using a product and creating demand for a good by means of advertising.

Advertising is an important part of any marketing strategy. It is based on the supposition that consumers must be informed about a product before they will purchase it.

Demand must be created for a product so the consumer will be persuaded to purchase it. Once the demand has been created, advertising may be used to maintain the demand as well as expand it.

Advertising has many advantages. It promotes mass production by creating and maintaining a substantial demand for a product as well as expanding that demand. This will usually result in lower prices for the mass-produced goods.

In order to maintain and expand the demand for its product through advertising, a firm will constantly strive to improve the product so it can point out the benefits of using the new improved product instead of the products of its competitors. Thus, advertising indirectly fosters product improvement and new product development.

Advertising also provides a service to consumers by keeping them informed about the features of various products.

In addition to the many advantages associated with advertising, there are a number of disadvantages. Advertising is extremely expensive and this added expense is usually passed on to the consumer in the form of higher prices.

Others argue that advertising persuades people to live beyond their means and purchase items they cannot afford. Many individuals also feel that advertising is misleading. They are exaggerated claims on the capabilities of various products.

To keep such activity to a minimum, the Federal Trade Commission carefully monitors all forms of advertising to make sure that no false or misleading statements are made by the advertiser.

An advertising medium represents the means used by a firm to carry its message to the consumer. Advertisers must carefully select the appropriate medium that best allows them to reach the desired market.

One medium may be more effective than another for reaching a particular group of consumers.

Advertisers have two goals they wish to achieve. They wish to reach as many potential consumers as possible and they wish to reach the particular consumer who would be most interested in their product. An effective campaign for baby food should focus on reaching as many parents or infants as possible. Such an advertising campaign would not be effective if it were reaching mostly elderly people who do not have infant children.

Other factors determining the media to be selected are the cost, the reach, the time to be covered, and the type of product or service to be promoted.

There are many types of advertising media that may be used to promote a good or service.

Point-of-sale advertising occurs when retail firms use window displays or signs in their stores to attract customers.

Newspaper advertisements are divided into two groups: display and classified advertisements. The classified advertisements are usually called want-ads, but real estate and other forms of real and personal property may be listed in this section. All other newspaper advertising comes under the display form. Display advertising may include pictorial displays and pictures as well as written material.

In addition, supplements may be inserted into the newspaper for display advertising.

Newspapers provide the principle medium of advertising for local firms. Besides the regular newspapers, many cities have weekly newspapers that are distributed to residents without charge. These newspapers are sometimes called throw-aways and are financed by the firms who advertise in them.

Magazines offer another printed medium for display advertisements. Since magazines are usually saved for more than one day, a display in a regional or national magazine may be seen several times before the magazine is discarded.

There are two general types of magazines: general circulation and special interest.

General circulation includes magazines that appeal to all types of individuals. Such magazines include Newsweek and Time. Products that have appeal to a general public, such as automobiles, cigarettes, and beer, are advertised in these magazines. Some national magazines publish editorial reports on region editions that allow companies to advertise in the magazine. They only pay for those issues circulated in their area.

Special interest magazines are designed to appeal to a limited market. Scientific American, Good Housekeeping, Home Journal, and Motor Trend are examples. Advertising in these magazines is targeted toward the people who purchase the issues.

Television and radio are also advertising mediums. While radio has declined as a powerful national medium, it is still used heavily for local advertising. Most products and services that depend on a national or large geographic region for their customers are advertising on television.

BOOKS

Lincoln, Neb. Sunday Journal and Star April 10, 1977

By Thomas Powers, AP
New York — Gloria Emerson has a lot of memories.

One is of a young man, an Army veteran she interviewed for a book recently published by Random House. This particular veteran had been blinded "I wish you had seen me before," he said — meaning before Vietnam, before he was wounded "I looked like Robert Wagner."

Then he took off his dark glasses and faced Gloria Emerson and asked, "What do I look like now?"

Ms Emerson remembers looking at his damaged face and saying, "You have a scar." She ran her finger along the scar, in effect showing it to him — across the top of one eye, down between the eyes, along the nose.

Gloria Emerson has a lot of memories like that, some from the two years she spent in Vietnam for the New York Times and some from talking to people in this country since. To make sure she doesn't forget, and to remind a public what the war was like, she has put them into a long book with a long title Winners and Losers: Battles, Retreats, Gains, Losses and Ruins From a Long War.

"Notice the cover," she said, referring to the fact that Vietnam was not mentioned. "It could be any war. It could be the Civil War. But everybody knows what it's about."

What it's about is Vietnam, and it is one of the very few books about Vietnam published in this country since the North Vietnamese entered Saigon and won the war at the end of April 1975. There have been only two books about the fall itself, The Last Day by John Pilger and Giai Phong, by Tiziano Terzani. Pilger is an Englishman, Terzani an Italian.

So far, no books about the end of the war have been published by Americans, a fact which strikes many observers as strange considering the cost of the American role in the war. Official figures put that cost at 55,000 dead Americans and $120 billion, with perhaps as much more money still to be spent in veterans' benefits.

Gloria Emerson

Alfred Knopf, is not surprised at the small number of books about the war since it ended. He points out that great war books tend to gestate in their authors for years.

Four of the greatest books about World War I, for example, appeared in 1928: Ernest Hemingway's A Farewell to Arms, Edmund Blunden's Undertones of War, Robert Graves' Goodbye to All That and Erich Maria Remarque's All Quiet on the Western Front.

Vietnam, Elliott says, was not just a bitter experience but a confusing one. "It will take time to understand what happened," he said. "We're enormously embarrassed at having made such a terrible mistake. A writer must find some way to explain how we could have been so terribly wrong."

With time, he thinks, the first, easy answers will fade and people will begin to see the war as a whole.

In a series of interviews, other New York editors expressed similar views, but several also cited the practical fact that books on Vietnam have not sold well. With the exceptions of Frances Fitzgerald's Fire in the Lake and David Halberstam's The Best and the Brightest, books on Vietnam generally have been what Samuel Johnson once called "a drug on the market."

Even highly praised books like Ron Kovic's Born on the Fourth of July, Robert Stone's Dog Soldiers, which won a National Book Award, and C.D.B. Bryan's Friendly Fire were commercially disappointing.

"After a series of failures," said an editor at a major publishing house in Boston, "our editorial board got into an anti-Vietnam thing. They didn't want to hear the word 'Vietnam,' but I should add we haven't really been offered anything on Vietnam worth publishing."

Tom Stewart, an editor who recently moved from Farrar, Straus & Giroux to Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, said he has read a lot of Vietnam novels in manuscript over the last year or two, most of them literary failures.

"People who went through it can't always write about it," he said. "I've seen a lot of books which were boring and badly done. World War II epics which had been moved south to the jungle."

Part of the problem, he says, is that the college graduates who might have written books often found ways to avoid military service, while the high school dropouts who did go must develop literary skill from scratch if they want to write about what they saw.

One who did was Larry Heinemann, a young Chicagoan who spent a year with the 25th Division in Cu Chi in the late 1960s. According to his editor at Farrar, Straus, Heinemann taught himself to write in order to capture what he had seen in Vietnam. The result is a novel called Close Quarters, which will be published in May and which already has begun to capture some attention in the publishing industry.

Another novel that may breach the public's disinterest in books about Vietnam is The Last Best Hope by Peter Tauber, which Harcourt Brace will promote as one of its major books next fall. Tauber's book, his second, is described as "an epic novel of the '60s" with a huge cast of characters, including such public figures as Nixon, Eugene McCarthy and Richard Goodwin. Tauber never went to Vietnam, but early readers say the book's Vietnam sections are among its best.

Other books about Vietnam scheduled to appear in the next year or so include:

- Great Spring Victory by General Van Tien Dung, the North Vietnamese commander who captured Saigon 18 months ago. His account of the campaign, described as a dramatic human history rather than a technical military treatise, originally was published in the Hanoi Nhan Dan, or People's Daily. An English translation will be published on April 30, the second anniversary of the fall of Saigon, by Monthly Review Press. Profits from the book's sale will go to the American group Friendship, which building a hospital in My Lai.

- Neil Sheehan, a former New York Times reporter who obtained the Pentagon Papers, is finishing a biography of John Paul Van, an American official killed in Vietnam. The book, which has grown into a broad history of American involvement in the war, will be published by Random House but does not yet have a title.

- CBS television correspondents Bernard and Marvin Kalb are working on Vietnam books, but no details have been announced.

- William Colby, director of the CIA from 1973 until 1976, is writing his memoirs for Simon & Schuster and is expected to deal at length with the Phoenix Program he ran in Vietnam. Described as an effort to "root out the Viet Cong infrastructure," the Phoenix Program is blamed in the deaths of at least 20,000 South Vietnamese and has been widely attacked as terrorism. In a recent article in the Washington Post, Colby recommended American aid to Vietnam as part of an attempt at postwar reconciliation.

- Sam Adams, a CIA analyst, discovered in the late '60s that the Viet Cong were roughly twice as numerous as previous estimates but failed to persuade the Army or the CIA officially to accept his figures until the Tet offensive in 1968. He is writing a major account of intelligence battles during the war. Tentatively entitled 14.3 (for the official number of the CIA's annual indochina estimate), Adams' book will be published by Norton.

- Hill & Wang, a division of Farrar, Straus, will publish an English translation of We Have Eaten the Forest of the Stone Spirit God. Written by Georges Condominas and published in France in the mid-1950s, the book is a description of a Montagnard culture in Vietnam which was virtually destroyed by the war. Ten years after the book's appearance, Condominas said he discovered that US Special Forces had been using an unauthorized translation of the book as a guide to military operations in the area he studied.

The publishers of these and other books are hoping they will overcome the public and critical disinterest that has sent some other books on Vietnam to an early grave. Viking Press, for example, published two novels — No Bugles, No Drums by Charles Durden and Parthian Shot by Lloyd Little — which generally were ignored. Little's novel won the Ernest Hemingway Award for the best first novel of 1975 but sold fewer than 10,000 copies in hardcover.

The reception of Ms Emerson's Winners and Losers has been mixed, although it has been widely reviewed.

Sander Vanocur in the Washington Post and David Halberstam in the Los Angeles Times praised the book, but the New York Times in both its daily book column and the Sunday Book Review, dismissed it as tendentious and overwrought.

Q. How much did Chip and Caron Carter have to pay the Bethesda Naval Hospital for the birth of their son?—R.W.G., Friendsville, Md

A. Chip and Caron Carter paid $168 a day to the Bethesda Naval Hospital. Caron Carter spent four days there.

CHIP AND CARON CARTER WITH NEWBORN SON JAMES

Q. Why would Paul Newman act in a filthy film such as "Slap Shot"?—Carol Post, New Canaan, Conn.

A. Newman makes films for money and because he hopes they will turn out well. "Slap Shot" presents him as a violent, dirty-talking hockey player-coach, but perhaps this is par for the hockey players of today.

Q. Is it a fact that most British politicians prefer to marry American wives because of their money, know-how, and drive?—F.D.D., Germantown, Pa.

A. At the turn of the century many British politicians traded titles for American money via marriage, but no longer. There are, however, several British politicians who have American wives. David Owen, new British Foreign Secretary, is married to the former New Yorker Deborah Schabert, a literary agent whose father published Boris Pasternak's novel "Dr. Zhivago." Other British politicians with American wives are Anthony Wedgwood Benn, Sir Keith Joseph, Sir Peter Rawlinson, Maurice Orbach, Robert MacLennan, and John Moore. Lord Harlech, former British Ambassador to the U.S., is also married to an American woman.

Q. I have just finished reading Sam Dash's account of Watergate, "Chief Counsel." Is the picture that he paints of Howard Baker an accurate one? And if so, how can the Republicans elect Baker Minority Leader and tout him for the White House?—Peggy Thomas, Oxford, Ohio.

A. The Republican party is scrambling desperately to find new leaders. George Bush of Texas is a possibility. Howard Baker is not a new face, and—says Sam Dash—his star has risen and fallen. Baker is a pretty tricky fellow according to Dash, who, of course, is not the world's most objective reporter.

Q. Who is the richest man in Jimmy Carter's home state of Georgia?—M. McCoy, Durham, N.C.

A. Probably Robert Winship Woodruff, 87, for 50 years the dominant force behind the growth of the Coca-Cola Co. From 1923 to 1973, Woodruff gradually amassed millions, became a civic leader of Atlanta.

Q. Was the late Clark Gable ever in love with Grace Kelly? If so, did he want to marry her? Was Gable an intelligent man?—L. D., Portland, Oreg.

A. Clark Gable fell in love with Grace Kelly during the filming of "Mogambo." They enjoyed a close friendship. Gable correctly decided that he was too old to marry Kelly, and she reluctantly agreed. Gable was basically an insecure, undereducated man who was attracted to lusty women who did not tax his limited brain power. In many ways his public image was fashioned by the MGM publicity department.

CLARK GABLE AND GRACE KELLY IN FILM "MOGAMBO"

Q. Is Barbra Streisand widely hated in Hollywood?—E.E., Colby, Kan.

A. Not widely.

GETTING DIVORCED: BOB DYLAN AND WIFE SARA

Q. Bob Dylan and his wife Sara were married for 11 years. They have five children. Now they are getting a divorce. How much will it cost Bob Dylan?—R.S., Hibbing, Minn

A. Somewhere between 5 and $10 million plus support payments for the couple's five children.

Q. Is it a fact that a woman who loses her job or a pay raise because she refuses to grant her boss some sexual favors cannot sue him in this country?—Elsa Kahn, Ft. Lauderdale, Fla.

A. Such a woman cannot sue her boss for damages under the U.S. Civil Rights Act. But according to U.S. District Court Judge Herbert Stern, Adrienne Tompkins, 31, a Bayonne, N.J., stenographer who alleged that she was fired after resisting her boss' advances, can sue for extortion or charge her superior with attempted rape. Judge Stern believes sexual attraction is a natural ingredient of life in which federal courts should become involved.

Q. Can you tell me what happened to Tony Ulasewicz, who delivered the $200,000 in blackmail money to the Watergate burglars? Was he up on some income tax charge?—Mrs. M. Penn, Freeport, N.Y.

A. Ulasewicz, 58, was sentenced to one year of unsupervised probation for failing to report as income the $40,000 he was paid for his Watergate services.

CARY GRANT WITH DAUGHTER JENNIFER AND WIFE DYAN CANNON IN 1966

STAR GURK In March, when actor Cary Grant checked into St. John's Hospital in Santa Monica, Cal., under the name Cary Robbins for a hernia repair, he laid down some strange and stringent rules.

His true identity was not to be revealed, and no surgery was to be performed on him in the presence of any female. Mr. Grant was adamant on the second point. No female nurse, no female attendant, no female of any sort was to cast eyes upon his undraped body in the operating room.

The rules were strictly obeyed. An inguinal (pertaining to the groin) hernia operation was performed on the film star only in the presence of males. He was then returned to his hospital room, where he permitted female nurses to serve him. Subsequently, Mr. Grant-Robbins was discharged from the hospital, none of the female staff having seen him in the nude.

Cary Grant at 73 is the most modest of men.

THE MOST HATED Idi Amin, Uganda's unpredictable president, is rapidly gaining on Adolf Hitler as the most hated man in history.

That is the finding in a poll taken of visitors to London's Madame Tussaud's Wax Museum, where many of history's great personages are on display in life-size models.

The visitors polled consider Joan of Arc and Winston Churchill the greatest heroine and hero of all time. Tied for next place are John F. Kennedy, Jesus, and Admiral Nelson.

SPECIAL INTERESTS THIRVE

Supporters of the Federal Election Campaign Act point to the public financing of the 1976 Presidential campaign, which permanently removed the executive branch from undue influence of private funds. But the law did nothing to stem the flow of private campaign contributions to Congressional candidates, and the figures prove it.

Last year, special-interest groups contributed a record $22.6 million to Congressional campaigns, an increase of 80% over 1974. Political action committees of corporations and business trade associations gave $7.1 million to Senate and House candidates, up from $2.5 million in 1974. Some 468 corporations used political action committees last year, compared to 100 in 1974.

The executive branch has been closed off, but the legislative branch has been opened to a heavier inflow of private money and influence.

Public financing of Congressional elections is long overdue.

COURTESY COURSES

The West German post office has launched a series of courtesy courses for some 30,000 clerks who serve the public.

The clerks are being taught how to say thank you, please, good morning, and other polite amenities.

The courses come as a result of a public opinion poll in which West German citizens said they generally liked the postmen who delivered their mail but they couldn't stand the "unfriendly and lazy clerks who manned the post office counters."

These clerks have now been told to repeat the following phrases until they are adopted into their normal behavior: "I shall not let any customer go away disappointed...Every customer has a right to my attention and interest...I will treat every customer politely as I myself would like to be treated...If I've had a bad day, I will not show it or take it out on the customer."

SNIFFERS

Japanese officials apparently trust noses more than machines that measure bad odors.

After environmental officials received 2840 complaints of poor air quality, the Tokyo government recently decided to appoint six sniffers with sensitive senses of smell. Their job is to poke their noses into the air and judge the degree of air pollution in areas near industrial plants.

ANTINUCLEAR VIEW

Russell Train, chief of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency under Presidents Nixon and Ford, resigned as EPA head when Jimmy Carter took office.

Train recently expressed antinuclear views that he held in check while he was in office. In a newsletter published by the Conservation Foundation, which he is rejoining part-time, Train is quoted as believing that the U.S. should aim for "the phasing out and eventual elimination of all nuclear power." Train is worried about the safeguard problems involving plutonium and the management of nuclear waste materials.

SHORT TAKES Jimmy Carter is doing a superb job in his courtship of the American people, a procedure in which he has had much practice. How well he is doing in conducting the Presidency is another matter. It will take at least one year of Carter in office to make a judgment on that one.

• The U.S. has security agreements with Japan, South Korea, and Taiwan, promising to protect all three in the event of attack. Japan therefore believes the U.S. should not normalize relations with Red China at the expense of abrogating its treaty with Taiwan. "We cannot conceive of economic prosperity without security and stability in the Far East," says an editorial in the Sankei Shimbun. Yet Japan was one of the first nations to normalize relations with Peking, hoping thereby to get in on the ground floor of Sino-Japanese trade. Unselfish thinkers, some Japanese.

• By the end of this century Mexico City will probably be the largest city in the world, with a population of 32 million. São Paulo, Brazil, will follow with a population of 26 million. If current population trends hold true, New York, London, Tokyo and other major metropolitan areas will give way to the cities of Third World countries. For example, the populations of Bogota, Manila, Karachi and Djakarta will triple or quadruple.

CROWDED WORLD Latest edition of the United Nations Demographic Yearbook shows that as of mid-1975, the world's population totaled 3.968 billion.

Last year there were more than 200,000 babies born each day. That means there will soon be 4 billion people on the earth. World population is increasing at a rate of 1.9% and doubling every 37 years.

Of all mankind, 56.9% (2.256 billion) live in Asia, 11.9% (473 million) in Europe, 10.1% (401 million) in Africa, 8.2% (324 million) in Latin America, 6.4% (255 million) in the Soviet Union, 6% (237 million) in North America and 0.5% (21.3 million) in the South Sea islands.

Shanghai is the world's most populous city, with 10.8 million inhabitants, followed by Tokyo (8.6 million), Mexico City (8.5 million), New York (7.6 million), Peking (7.5 million), London (7.2 million) and Moscow (6.9 million).

The most rapid population growth is occurring in Africa, where 10 of 47 countries have annual growth rates of 3% or more. In Europe, 26 of 37 countries reported an annual increase of less than 1%.

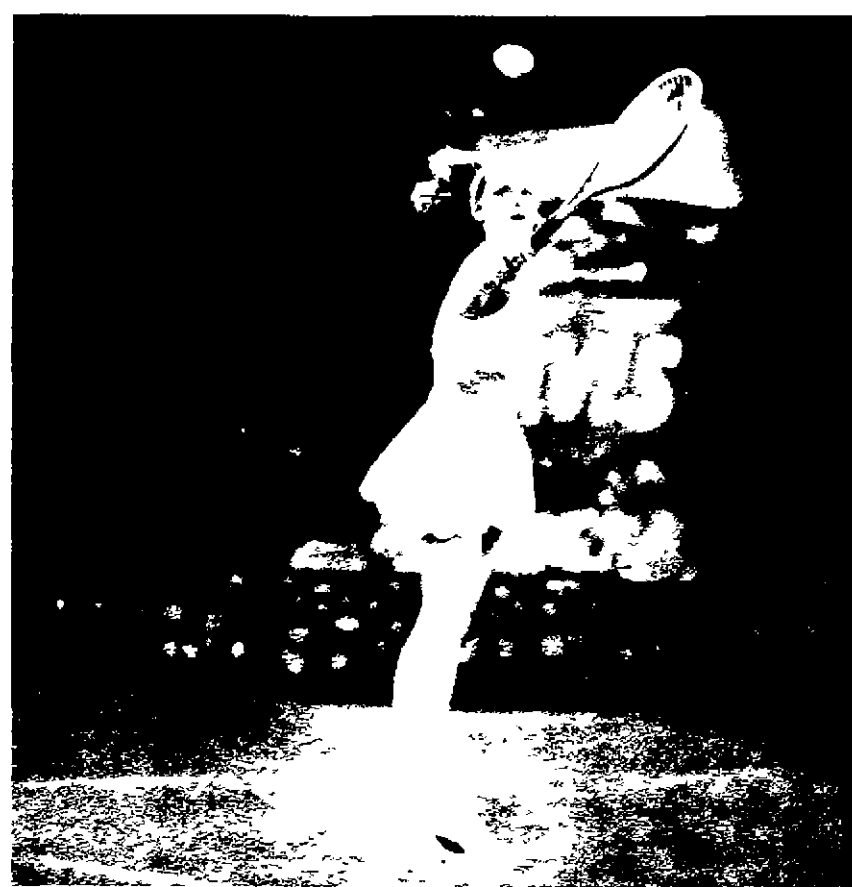

The yearbook reports Sweden with the lowest infant mortality rate--8.3 per 1000 births--followed by Iceland, Denmark, France, Switzerland, Spain, Singapore, Luxembourg and Canada. The United States ranks 20th, with 16.7 per 1000 live births.

The African countries show shocking infant mortality rates: Liberia (159.2 per 1000 births), Malawi (142.1) and Rwanda (132.8), for example.

As regards longevity, women in Sweden enjoy the longest life expectancy--77.6 years--with 13 other countries reporting female life expectancy at birth to be over 75. Among them are Norway, France, The Netherlands, Canada, Japan, Denmark, the U.S. (76.4), England and Wales.

Sweden reports the life expectancy of its men at 72.1 years, ranking No. 1 in the world. The life expectancy of U.S. males is 68.5 years.

BANKRUPTS California has the dubious distinction of housing more bankrupt residents than any other state. The American Bankruptcy Council reports that 23,471 bankruptcy petitions were filed in Southern California alone last year compared to 17,051 in Illinois, which ranked second.

TENNIS PRO VALERIE ZIEGENFUSS IN ACTION WITH NEW LARGE RACKET

BIG RACKET Little more than a year ago (January 1976), Prince Manufacturing of Princeton, N.J., brought out a new "Prince" tennis racket with a 50% larger hitting area.

More than 50,000 people have since purchased the jumbo racket designed by Howard Head, formerly of the Head Ski Company which introduced aluminum skis to the sporting goods field after World War II.

The "Prince" is used by Don Budge, Clark Graebner, Ion Tiriac, Valerie Ziegenfuss and a flock of other pros, but it seems mostly to appeal to beginners and veterans because its larger surface area provides more target for solid contact with the ball.

Despite what many players believe, there is no regulation that limits the size, quality or weight of a tennis racket. They can be made of graphite, tin, wood, stainless steel, fiberglass or a combination of alloys, and strung with gut, nylon, string or wire.

The "Prince" which sells for about $80, is strung with nylon at a higher tension than ordinary rackets. To many players, it resembles a snowshoe. It is no more unwieldy than other rackets, and regulars who play with it find it comfortable.

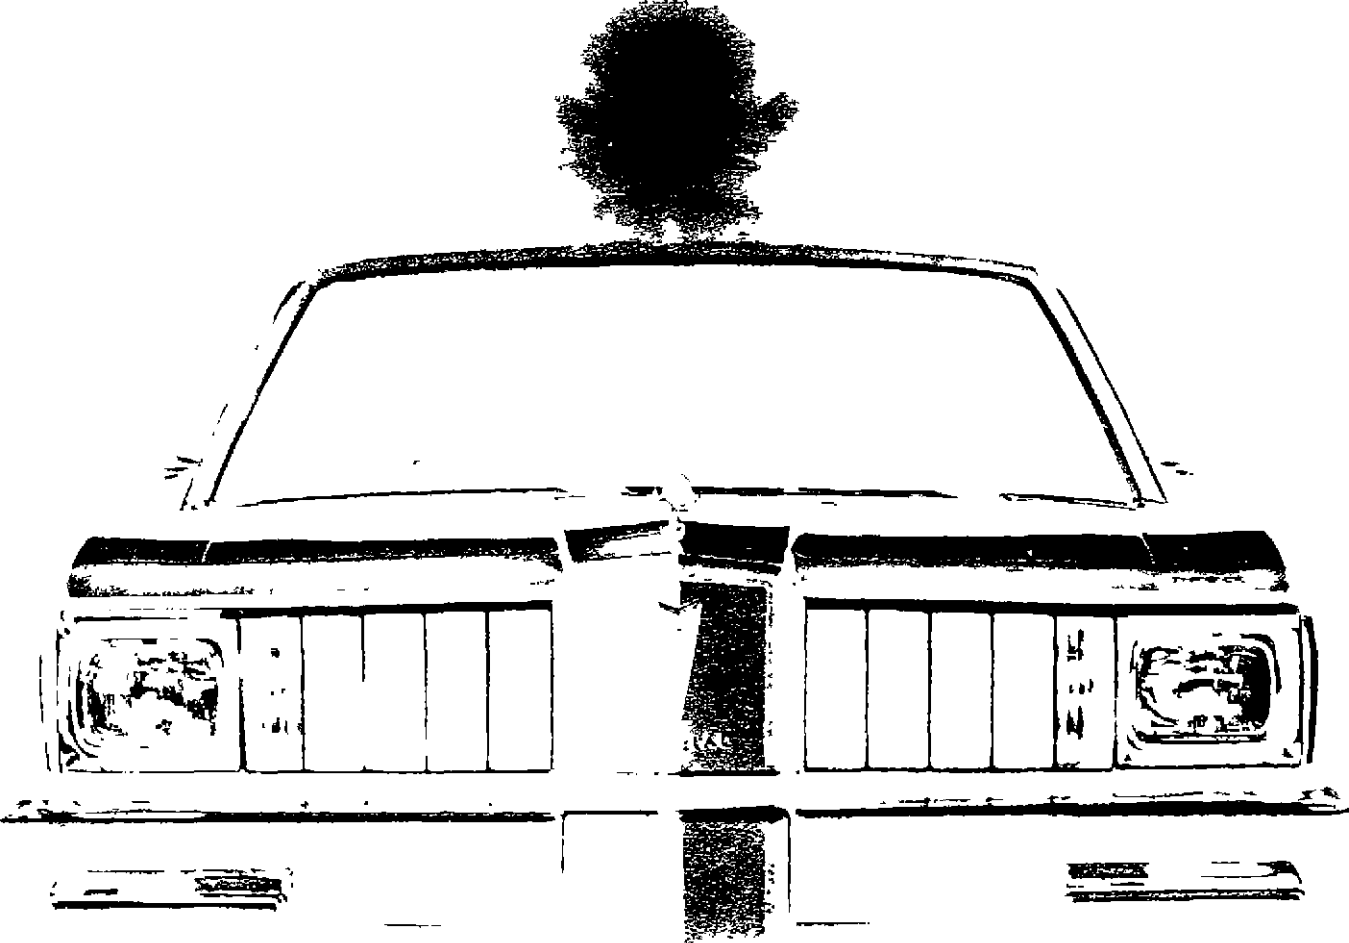

Don Budge, who won the U.S., Wimbledon, French and Australian championships in 1938, has signed a five-year contract to use the racket in all upcoming senior matches. Valerie Ziegenfuss has been using it on the Virginia Slims circuit.

Björn Borg promotes Bancroft rackets, Jimmy Connors plays with a Wilson, Arthur Ashe uses a Head -- and each racket manufacturer makes particular claims for his product.

Bob McClintick of Prince talks about power, accuracy, large center area and other virtues. But in the final analysis, rackets do not win tennis matches -- people do.

Year-round roses, in Minnesota no less. About 50 miles northwest of Minneapolis, a power company is piping some of its 'waste' warm water through underground conduits to a half-acre greenhouse. Even when nighttime temperatures get as low as 25 below zero, the greenhouses maintain a cozy 60 degrees, and the results are roses, snapdragons, tomatoes, lettuce, green peppers, and pine seedlings. Commercial growers are studying the demonstration project with an eye toward large-scale production. The warm water, incidentally, is piped to cooling towers anyhow, making the crops something of a technological bonus.

The best time to buy. According to a Chase Manhattan Bank publication, May is the best time to purchase home furnishings, outdoor furniture, luggage, jewelry, and linens. In June, look for good buys in bedding, sleepwear, lingerie, hosiery, men's and boys' wear, women's shoes, furniture, and floor coverings. July is the time for furs, fabric, and furniture, and August means bedding, linens, furs, furniture, and leftover '77 cars as the '78 models appear. Beating inflation makes sense any time, and being a smart shopper is a year-round job.

"NOT ONLY DO THEY ELIMINATE THE PARKING PROBLEM, THEY GET 243 MILES TO THE GALLON!"

The price of conservation. Federal law already mandates that major household appliance manufacturers increase the energy efficiency of their products by not less than 20 percent by 1980, and several states are preparing to follow suit. However, there's a problem. The energy-efficient machines already being produced by appliance makers are not selling well. Such appliances require more insulation and more copper in key parts like compressors. This drives up the price, and consumers are opting for the cheaper, more energy-extravagant models. The moral: energy conservation won't be cheap.

Pipeline Pete says: "The Lord's Prayer has 56 words, at Gettysburg, Lincoln spoke only 268 long-remembered words, and we got a whole country goin' on the 1,322 words in the Declaration of Independence. So how come it took the federal government 26,911 words to issue a regulation on the sale of cabbages?"

Parade's All-America High School Girls Basketball Team

by Haskell Cohen

Twenty-one years ago PARADE presented the first annual all-America high school boys basketball team. Today, PARADE presents the first all-America high school girls basketball squad.

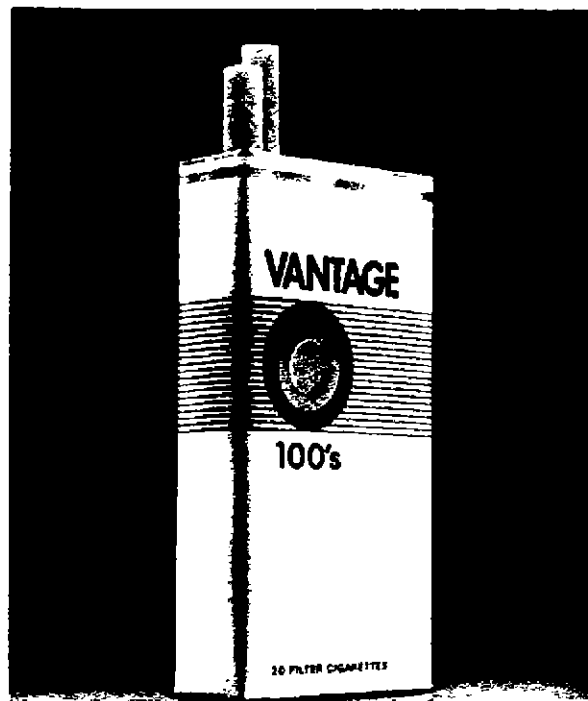

Obviously, no one person could select such a team from the thousands of competent players throughout the country. However, by polling hundreds of college and high school coaches, college recruiters (usually male faculty members) and scores of writers, PARADE has compiled a squad of 40 females who will most likely be hailed as tomorrow's college stars and representatives for the U.S. in the 1980 and 1984 Olympic Games.

The biggest problem in compiling the squad is that there are two types of female basketball played in high schools today. The majority play the five-woman type akin to the masculine brand of the game. But there are still participants in the six-woman style of basketball that places a heavy accent on the three forward positions. The three front-court players are the scorers, and the other three players are basically defenders. Consequently, our selection board had to evaluate the potential of these defense-type players as contrasted to the well-rounded performers in five-woman basketball. Iowa has traditionally excelled in the six-woman game.

Vantage perfects low-tar 100's.

Introducing Vantage 100's.

You may not have known it, but those extra long 100's that so many smokers find popular are usually extra long in tar.

And that means they couldn't be Vantage. Because Vantage was made for smokers who wanted a cigarette that was low in tar and high in flavor.

So we resisted the trend. Until we could perfect a 100 with the famous Vantage combination of full flavor and low tar.

Well, we've done it. In new Vantage 100's. A blend of flavor-rich tobaccos with tar levels held down to the point where good taste still comes through.

That's the Vantage point. And that's the point of Vantage 100's. There's never been a long cigarette quite like it.

Try a pack today. We think you'll go along with us.

and is—along with a few diehard adjoining states and some Southern areas—adamant about continuing with the “old-fashioned” style of ball, which is not played internationally and is doomed to extinction in the not-too-distant future.

Twenty-six states are represented on this first PARADE All-America High School Girls Basketball Team. Tennessee leads with four representatives, followed by Ohio and Iowa with three each. However, unlike this year's male team—where the preponderance of topflight players was fielded in the East—the female squad extends from the upper Northwest to the Deep South.

The players were chosen solely on ability, not by position. Most will participate on Memorial Day weekend in the annual Seamco Basketball Classic at Kutsher's Country Club in Monticello, N.Y., for the benefit of the American Cancer Society. A double-header featuring the all-America high school stars—one female game and one male—will be offered for the first time to viewers throughout the country on cable television, as the Federal Broadcasting Company is donating the air time.

Handicapped star

It should be noted that one of the first-squad members, Kim Peters of Andrew, Iowa, was born without a right hand but overcame her handicap and is acknowledged to be the finest defensive player in her state.

In most cases, those selected to the basketball squad are also topflight competitors in other sports. For example, Kim Peters is a high jump qualifier in state meets. Several of the others are all-state stars in volleyball. Thus far, it seems, most female basketball stars have not become specialists in the one sport, as have their male counterparts.

Lt. Cmdr. Barry Chambers, head of Atlantic Strike Team, reports to Coast Guard District Headquarters after he and his men had to evacuate the ill-fated tanker Argo Merchant.

Men of the Coast Guard Strike Force

They Fight Oil Spills All Over the World

by L. H. Whittemore

ELIZABETH CITY, N.C.

Twenty-four hours a day, Lt. Cmdr. Barry Chambers of the U.S. Coast Guard keeps a small beeper attached to his belt or at his bedside. Whenever it goes off, he packs his gear, bids his wife goodbye and heads out on a crucial and dangerous mission—combating an oil spill at sea.

"We're like a fire department," he says. "When the alarm sounds, we get moving."

Chambers, 35, is part of the National Strike Force, a select 60-man group specially trained to fight oil spills. It's divided into three 20-member teams spread out to cover the entire country: a Pacific unit based in San Francisco, a Gulf team in Bay St. Louis, Miss., and the Atlantic Strike Team, headed by Chambers and stationed here in Elizabeth City.

Since the inception of the force in 1973, these men have flown to hundreds of potential or actual spills, bringing a vast amount of sophisticated equipment with them. Members repeatedly risk their lives to rescue crews, save ships from sinking, salvage oil still aboard, contain the spills and help clean up the waters.

"The past winter was pretty rough," said Chambers when PARADE paid a recent visit to the air base here.

It was 8 a.m. last Dec. 15, for example, when he was alerted at home here by a signal from his beeper. The Liberian tanker Argo Merchant, carrying more than 7.5 million gallons of thick heating oil, had run aground 27 miles southeast of Nantucket Island, Mass.

By 10:30 a.m., Chambers and two members of his team were aboard a C-130 cargo plane, packed with anti-pollution gear, flying from North Carolina to Massachusetts. When they arrived on Cape Cod, the winds were blowing at 20 knots and the seas were kicking up to six feet. To jump aboard the stricken tanker from another vessel would be too dangerous, so that night they were taken offshore by helicopter. One by one, they were lowered onto the deck of the Argo in darkness.

A week later, the ship broke apart and dumped all of its syrupy cargo into the sea, causing the largest coastal oil spill in American history. "That was one situation that got the best of us, because of the weather," Chambers says. "It also received most of the publicity."

In late December, the Atlantic Strike Team was called to the Delaware River near Philadelphia, where the Liberian-registered tanker Olympe Games had run aground, spilling some 133,000 gallons of crude oil and fouling the shorelines of three states. Over the following weeks, members flew to the Great Lakes, Buzzards Bay, Mass., the Hudson River, Chesapeake Bay, each time helping to contain an explosive situation.

Worldwide duty

Strike-team contingents have also been sent on missions around the world. In January 1975, a unit of 10 men from all three teams flew to the Straits of Malacca near Singapore at the request of the Japanese government. A supertanker called Showa Maru had gone aground, spilling more than 1 million gallons of oil before the Coast Guard experts arrived to help pump off the remainder.

One harrowing experience in foreign waters began in August 1974, when the Chilean government called for help. Eight strike-team members flew with their equipment to the Strait of Magellan after the tanker Metula had lost 52,000 tons of light Arabian crude oil.

The Americans were dropped aboard the Metula and forced to live on the crippled ship, amid primitive conditions, for 43 days. With currents of up

Grounded off Nantucket Island, Mass., the Argo Merchant was buffeted by strong winds and heavy seas. Before strike-team members could save its 7.5 million gallons of thick heating oil, the ship broke apart and sank to eight knots and huge tides, the men struggled to position their pumping gear over the various cargo tanks. Working in freezing hurricane winds with virtually no heat aboard, they got the ship offloaded and refloated.

The men can get to any spill affecting the United States within two hours. They not only wear signal beepers on their belts but carry $500 in cash or travelers checks to make sure they are never stranded. Each man also has a set of "open orders" and an "official passport" enabling him to go anywhere in the world at a moment's notice.

One bulletin issued by the Coast Guard warns prospective volunteers that "many response missions are hazardous and risky endeavors." In fact, a 30-year-old skin diver with the Atlantic team, Dennis Perry, was killed in April 1974 inspecting the hull of a grounded ship in the St. Lawrence Seaway.

There was the time, also, when team member Keith Darby released the port anchor from its perch outside the hull of the Argo. Lowered by ropes tied to his ankles through an 18-inch hawse-pipe, he dangled precariously over the heaving, cold sea while he removed the anchor. Then his colleagues pulled him back up through the pipe.

Dangers and mishaps

It's perhaps surprising that there haven't been more serious injuries to strike-team members over the past four years. "We've had a reasonable amount of hernias and mashed fingers," Chambers reflects, and some members of the Gulf team have been bitten by snakes in swamps and marshes. But what about the danger of oil itself? "We've gotten used to it," Chambers says. "It's more psychological than anything else. With our diving suits on, we only get oil on our hands and faces. Many oils burn the skin, but we use chemical solvents for that."

The pollution fighters are generally in their mid-20's or 30's, most having served at least five years in the Coast Guard before being accepted into a strike team. They are "cross-trained" in all the rescue and salvage techniques, yet some have also become specialists.

Twenty-nine-year-old Darby, for example, has earned the title of "the birdman" among his Atlantic team colleagues because of his expertise in the cleaning and rehabilitation of waterfowl. At least five men are topflight divers, while others are machinery technicians, instructors and so forth. A few are becoming experts in the field of hazardous chemicals, which may turn out to be more of a plague than oil.

Still others, like Lt. John Clay, 26, are deeply concerned about the environment. "I grew up with the environ-

About half are married, despite the fact that they spend more than 60 percent of their lives away from home. Some cleanup jobs extend as long as three months. Chambers himself spent 57 days at the scene of the Argo disaster.

"For the past three years," says his attractive wife Cindy, "I've planned a Christmas party for all the men and a C-130 and transported by air. Perhaps the most impressive unit is the Air Deliverable Anti-Pollution Transfer System (ADAPTS), capable of pumping 1800 gallons of oil a minute.

"We lost two of them when the Argo sank," Chambers says, "but there are still five left."

IF YOU HAVE IRON POOR BLOOD ALL THE VITAMINS IN THE WORLD WON'T HELP

Iron poor blood is the most widespread nutritional ailment in America today. And taking vitamins can't help, because vitamins don't contain iron.

What you need is Geritol, every day. Geritol is so rich in iron, just one tablet contains more iron than even a pound of calf's liver. Plus vitamins important to your health.

their families. Each time, I had to cancel it at the last minute because they were called away to an oil spill."

In a large warehouse at the air base, the Atlantic team has $2 million worth of equipment. Some of the pieces are huge, such as a 32-foot motor home that functions as a mobile command post, but each can be rolled right into down to a shovel and rake on the shore."

All of the oil spilled from the Argo, luckily, went out to sea rather than toward the shore. Who cleaned it up? "God," says Chambers, who points out that the No. 6 heating oil "couldn't have been made to burn off with a blowtorch" because of its thickness.

There are three 20-man teams in the National Strike Force, spread out to cover the Gulf, Atlantic and Pacific coasts.

Seas Oil Containment System, is housed like an accordion: When activated, it snakes out onto the water's surface and inflates automatically to keep the oil confined. The boom is 600 feet long and can withstand five-foot seas and winds of 20 knots.

Still another item is an Oil Recovery System consisting of a skimmer supported on either side by large sausage-shaped storage tanks. After the oil is lapped up, it goes into the tanks for eventual disposal elsewhere. One of the skimmers weighs seven tons. Also, 5000-pound fenders can be placed between tankers and barges.

The strike team does much of the skimming with large discs. The oil sticks to them and gets wiped off and dropped into a barge. Most often, private contractors are hired to finish the job. As Chambers puts it, "Everything evolves to a guy with a hose and vacuum tank, sucking up that oil. Then it comes

by Pamela Swift

Warning

Drug dealers in New York, Chicago, Washington, D.C., and other metropolitan centers have stolen a page from Charles Dickens. Not that many of them ever heard of Fagin, who ran a school of thieves for children in "Oliver Twist," sending them out to rob. But they're doing virtually the same thing, hiring 12- and 13-year-olds as drug-pushers.

If such a young boy or girl is caught selling drugs, he or she is not subject to the stiff penalties that are mandatory for adult drug-pushers. Hence, what the police are now encountering is a group of children who are pushing drugs on a percentage basis. Sell $1000 worth of cocaine, and the commission is a straight 10 percent.

Parental Poll

According to a recent Roper poll, the first choice of American parents as regards their children's careers is medicine. Thirty percent of today's parents rate it as the most desirable career.

"The least desirable career" for their children is politics.

Teaching ranks second as a parental favorite, followed by law and engineering.

Kim Il Sung, the dictator of North Korea who may well be as nutty a fruitcake as Idi Amin of Uganda, has finally chosen his oldest son as his successor.

The son, Kim Jung Il, is 36 and is scheduled to take over after his father reaches 65 this month. Facts about the junior Kim are unknown outside North Korea.

Campus Fad

The latest fad on U.S. college campuses calls for female students to have their faces copied by reproduction machines. The coed merely presses her face against the machine, closes her eyes, has Xerox or any other copying machine reproduce her face.

Cooking schools are proliferating around the country, teaching thousands new culinary skills, exotic dishes.

At L'Academie de Cuisine in Bethesda, Md., chef François Dionot (r) shows how to prepare a French dinner.

Everybody's Going to Cooking School

by Carl Norcross

Suddenly it's the "in" thing to be a cook. By the thousands, men and women are flocking to cooking schools in private kitchens, deluxe teaching centers, evening high schools, community colleges, department stores and even to schools in France and Italy. The boom is not with brides or beginners. It's made up of people who already know how to cook. "Food is now part of a fashion image," says a Macy's executive, "and the really with-it person has to be interested."

In Greater New York there are over 100 cooking schools, some booked two years ahead. Washington, D.C., boasts over 70, five times the number of three years ago. In San Diego, one adult education center has over 20 courses, from bread making to Mexican and Italian cooking. In San Francisco, some 65 schools attract hopeful gourmets, with 20 more in the suburbs. "Their growth is fantastic," says a Bay Area observer.

The main impetus behind the boom is foreign travel: this year some 23.5 million Americans are going abroad, widening their food tastes. Thus, in Manhattan, nearly 600 foreign restaurants specialize in foods of 41 different nations. Also, enjoyment of foreign foods and high restaurant prices lead many people to a cooking class where they learn to do it themselves.

The yearly avalanche of cookbooks is another stimulus. An unbelievable 2500 different cookbooks are now available—one series on foods of the world sold over 12 million copies. Most newspapers have a weekly food page. Julia Child's TV lessons showed millions of viewers a skilled cook at work.

At L'Academie de Cuisine in Bethesda, Md., French-born François Dionot tells his students where he buys each food, how to store it, the best pots and tools to use and many other valuable tips. He explains why he does what he does, passing on all the little tricks he has developed. The climax of a lesson in most schools is the tasting session at the end—often a several-course lunch or dinner as well as a social occasion.

A good cooking school attracts students because it is fun. Dr. Kenneth Thomas and his wife Sarah attended one of Ursula Knaeusel's courses for couples in Atlanta, and Dr. Thomas says, "We had so much fun last year that we organized a group of neighbors to go with us this year. Some of the men don't cook but find it entertaining and good eating." Three-quarters of the students are repeaters, as was First Lady Rosalynn Carter, who continued for four courses.

Immediate satisfaction

The payoff from a cooking class is immediate in personal satisfaction. Says a woman in a Chinese cooking class: "From my teacher I learned how to hold vegetables and meat, and how to curl my fingers in and under to be out of the way. I can now chop fast without slicing off my fingertips! I feel very professional."

Family and friends are also impressed with one's new skills. Knowing about foods also adds a whole new dimension to living and traveling. As Escoffier, the great French food authority, wrote, "To know how to eat is to know how to live."

Most schools revolve around foreign cooking. The most popular classes are in French foods, with Chinese and Italian next. In large cities like Washington there are also classes in Mexican, Indian, Greek, Japanese, Vietnamese, Thai, Hungarian and many specialties like pastry making.

Classes are usually small and held in the teacher's kitchen. In Los Angeles, however, about 50 of the 75 schools are public adult classes in high schools, colleges, churches and other institutions. In most large cities classes are also sponsored by department stores or cookware shops.

Sessions are usually once a week for six to eight weeks, and prices vary from $5 or $10 for an adult education course to $20, $30 or $50 a session for a small class taught by a famous teacher.

Among the better-known schools is Julie Dannenbaum's Creative Cooking in Philadelphia. Now 12 years old, it has a staff of five teachers and invites a dozen outside experts to come in to teach their specialties. A crash course for out-of-towners meets every day for one week. Students come here from all over the U.S. and even from foreign countries.

Other well-known schools include La Bonne Cocotte in New York, run by French-born Lydie Marshall, where four lessons cost $90. Annemarie Huste, former chef to Jacqueline Kennedy Increasingly, serious cooks have been going abroad to take graduate courses at schools such as La Varenne in Paris.

among others, offers five consecutive daily lessons in New York for $180. Marcella Hazan's six-lesson course, also in New York, is $250 and is reserved for two years ahead.

In Westport, Conn., and Atlanta, Ga., Cook's Corner teaches teachers as well as beginners. It has a franchise operation for a combination school and cookware shop. Based in San Francisco, Michael James combines visits to nearby wineries with two- to five-day cooking classes that cost from $395 to $990. Jean Brady, based in Santa Monica, has classes in other California cities—and more men than women in some of them. In Austin, Tex., Ann Clark has a thriving school based on what she learned while living in France. A highly successful "Cooking for Kids" promotion is held in the new Bloomingdale's store near Washington and will be repeated in other cities. When French chef Michel Guerard taught at Macy's in San Francisco, he was mobbed.

Going abroad to school

Newest aspect of the boom is the number of serious cooks who go abroad for a graduate course. A school in France or Italy becomes a good excuse to travel. The venerable Cordon Bleu in Paris also has a branch in London. The Trois Gourmandes in Paris is booked two years ahead. Julia Child, Simone Beck and James Beard helped to sponsor the new La Varenne in Paris. Princess Ere gives classes in Rouen. American cookbook writer Richard Olney has occasional classes in Provence, and there are also classes for foreigners at Aix-en-Provence, Avignon and Beaune. British travel agents promote an eight-day London to Venice tour for would-be cooks. For travelers with $2495 to spend, a 17-day trip from Los Angeles combines a wine tour to France with a dozen cooking lessons.

Some 2000 students a year, mostly British and American, attend the five-day Dieppe Cooking Course run by three hotels in Dieppe, France. It costs only $200 from London, including hotel and travel. In more deluxe surroundings, the famous Gritti Palace Hotel in Venice and the Grande Hotel in Rome have summer classes.

Off to Bologna

Marcella Hazan, author of an Italian cookbook, teaches in New York and also takes students to Bologna, where they go to markets, wineries and restaurants, as well as cooking classes. Names and addresses of European schools can be obtained from Air France or TWA.

Popular as cooking classes are here, we are still behind Japan. In Tokyo, for example, there are hundreds of cooking schools. A leading teacher, Tomi Egami, owns a school that occupies an entire 10-story building, with scores of classes going simultaneously. Who knows? If the boom continues here, we may come to that.

The Growing Use—and Uses— of One-Day Surgery

by Lawrence Galton

Through a revolving door Mrs. Lee Grossman walked into New York's Mount Sinai Hospital had varicose vein surgery and walked out the same day. About 40 types of operations are now being performed on a one-day basis.

Report the Los Angeles physicians, advantages of outpatient biopsy are many. The cost is about one fifth that of a two day hospital stay—although the surgeon's fee may be the same. And women with a breast lump may seek medical attention sooner if they know diagnosis will be less costly, emotionally as well as financially. The great majority of women needing biopsy can avoid the unnecessary mental suffering of consenting to a possible radical mastectomy when in fact it will turn out quickly that they don't need it.

No hospital stress

Another one day surgery advantage of no small importance is the absence of the usual stress associated with hospital admission.

The atmosphere is relaxed. Commonly patients are met in the reception room, weighed, have temperature taken, go right to the operating room and—after their surgery—move along to a small recovery room while the effects of the anesthesia wear off. Then they go home.

One day surgery is being used increasingly for children. At the Albert Einstein College of Medicine Hospital in New York City, Dr. Ira Greifer, Director of Pediatrics, has reported that "everyone loves it—children, parents, physicians." It saves money for parents, of course, but it also makes the child happier because his mother is with him, eliminates disruption for the family, and allows the hospital, using just five beds, to provide care for as many as 1300 children a year.

Less time in hospitals

"For children undergoing minor surgery," says Dr. Greifer, "walk in surgery is the best medicine we can give them. The less time a child has to stay in the hospital, the less traumatic the experience."

Dr. Arthur H. Aufses, Chairman of the Department of Surgery at Mount Sinai Hospital and Medical School, echoes that conviction in terms of adults as well. "The trend," he observes, "is more and more toward less and less use of hospital beds. We have learned that the less time a patient spends in the hospital, the fewer the complications and the better the psychological response."

If you're due to undergo surgery—one of the more than 15 million Americans who will be in the next 12 months—you might ask your surgeon whether it can be performed on an outpatient basis. If so, you may happily—with savings of time, money, inconvenience, family upset and possibly even complications—walk in and get it done and walk out under your own steam a few hours later.

Lawrence Galton's latest book is "Save Your Stomach," Crown Publishers.

Early one recent morning, a New York City woman entered Mount Sinai Hospital for varicose vein surgery. That same afternoon, the surgery successfully completed, she was back home in time to greet her children returning from school. Ordinarily, the operation would have required three to five days of hospitalization.

In Phoenix, Ariz., a nurse who wanted sterilization done chose not to be an inpatient in her own hospital. Instead, at 8:15 a.m., she entered Surgicenter, an innovative facility specializing in one day procedures. After being prepared for surgery and undergoing the 19-minute operation and spending an hour in a recovery room, she was picked up by her husband at noon.

In Burlington, Vt., a 6-year-old boy needing an ear operation arrived at the Medical Center Hospital at 10:10 a.m. Half an hour later he changed into pajamas and shortly after noon was jogging down the corridor on his way home, the operation all over.

Such incidents are increasingly commonplace now. Same-day surgery—also called in and out surgery and walk in surgery—is enjoying a remarkable boom, not only in availability but also in variety.

Although it was pioneered in 1961 at the Lenox Hill Hospital in Grand Rapids, Mich., the idea of outpatient surgery did not really begin to catch on until the early '70s.

Today, well over 2500 hospitals provide it, and the number is growing constantly. Some hospitals which began by setting aside operating rooms a day or two a week now are using building or remodeling whole surgical wings for outpatient surgery full time.

In addition, at least 20 free-standing independent clinics devoted solely to same day surgery are at work in such places as Phoenix, Wichita, Kan., Columbus, Ohio, Austin, Tex., St. Cloud, Minn., and Arlington Heights, Ill.

Saves money

One obvious advantage of same day surgery is convenience. Another is financial. The Phoenix nurse, for example, paid $177, exclusive of the surgeon's fee. Ordinarily, she'd have stayed two days and run up a hospital bill of $380.

Already, the 40-odd types of operations being performed on a one-day basis include removal of cysts and cervical polyps, dilation and curettage, therapeutic abortion, tonsillectomy and adenoidectomy, vasectomy, cataract removal, and various kinds of plastic and orthopedic surgery.

And as the list expands, benefits become more and more obvious. Time, convenience and cost savings are being discovered.

Consider surgical stripping of varicose veins, a common procedure. Now, at New York's Mount Sinai Hospital, Dr. Robert A. Nabatoff has pioneered in putting vein stripping on an in-and-out basis and has recently reported remarkable success for 1456 patients, and with a striking reduction of complications.

Typically, a patient enters the hospital by 7:30 a.m., is not only finished with surgery but walking around by 10:30, back home by 4 p.m., and next day performing all normal activities with time out for only a brief return to the hospital for a check.

And Dr. Nabatoff has found that vein inflammation and clotting (thrombophlebitis), a postoperative complication in 1 to 2 percent of hospitalized patients, has been virtually eliminated in same day surgery. The probable reason is early return to activity instead of bed rest, which has markedly reduced postoperative pain as well.

Also at Mount Sinai, Dr. Changsul Oh is performing hemorrhoidectomy using cryosurgery—application of an icy cold probe instead of a scalpel.

Conventional surgical removal of hemorrhoids has been an especially painful procedure. Patients have suffered major discomfort for as long as five days and have needed hospitalization for as long as a week.

Painless technique

But the freezing technique of cryosurgery is another matter. Touching the icy probe to hemorrhoidal tissue usually can be done without anesthesia. And more than 90 percent of patients experience no pain or discomfort, can leave the hospital immediately and return to work the next day.

Hernia repairs, too, are now being carried out on a one day basis. This promises to be a special boon for the elderly, to whom hernia repair often has been denied. There has been fear, not unjustified, of possible hazards connected with anesthesia and bed rest.

But the elderly, even those with other chronic problems, come through well when hernia repair is carried out under a local anesthetic with hospitalization limited to one day, meals uninterrupted, and activity resumed almost immediately. So says a recent report by Dr. Carroll J. Bellis of the University of California, California College of Medicine, Irvine.

In a series of 2914 patients aged 70 to 99—including some with asthma, severe emphysema, hypertension, heart disease or other problems—not a single untoward event attributable to hernia repair developed and the patients left the hospital on the day of operation.

Breast biopsy—removal of a small sample of tissue for microscopic study—has been done on an inpatient basis. But is outpatient biopsy feasible?

It is, according to Sister Mary Ann Lou, M.D., and other physicians at the Los Angeles County Martin Luther King Jr. General Hospital, in a study of 90 breast biopsies performed on outpatients. Although biopsy is essential when there is the slightest suspicion of malignancy, in only three of the 90 women were the specimens malignant, requiring mastectomy.

my FAVORITE jokes

by RAY PASQUIN

EDITOR'S NOTE: Some of those momentous "firsts" in show business aren't always what they're cracked up to be. "At a Florida racetrack," Ray Pasquin recalls, "an elderly lady came up to me and said, 'We saw your show the other night. I know all about your act.' She started doing one of my lines, and I felt wonderful—that had never happened before. I asked how she could remember my act. She said, 'I'm a trivia expert.'"

Ray has entertained at the Baltimore and Great Gorge Playboy clubs, Grandma Minny's in Philadelphia, at Pip's, Catch A Rising Star, the Improv and The Comic Strip in New York. His "Ray Pasquin Show" is syndicated on TV.

Here are some of Ray Pasquin's jokes.

Today's movies are great. I went to see "Rocky" and was really surprised. I thought it was going to be about our former Vice President.

The other night I saw an unusual horror movie. The vampire kept falling asleep throughout the film. At the end I found out why. Apparently he had been drinking tired blood.

I play a lot of golf—my handicap is my clubs.

I went golfing with a very noisy caddy. He kept bothering my game. I turned to him and said, "You're the world's worst caddy." He answered, "What a coincidence!"

When I was a kid, I had a weird friend. His only two interests were baseball and vampires. He later became a batboy.

My brother was always drinking. But for 17 years I never knew he drank. Then one day I saw him sober.

My doctor is unusual. He used to be an auto worker and built cars in Detroit. Most of his patients have been called back for repairs.

I went to see the doctor last week. I was worried I might have a serious disease. He broke the bad news by telling me not to read any novels published in installments.

And he keeps trying crazy scientific experiments. He once tried to cross a pygmy with a restaurant chef in order to get a short-order cook.

All of the politicians want to eliminate poverty. That's ridiculous. Poverty is the only thing we have left.

Being in show business you have to have an agent. Mine is the worst. He says he knows everyone in showbiz. I asked him if he knew Blood, Sweat and Tears. He told me he knew Sweat personally.

I have a job as an usher at Zsa Zsa Gabor's weddings. Not much money, but it's steady work.

I've written comedy material for some pretty concerted stars. One guy is so bad he phones Dial-A-Prayer and asks, "Any messages?"

Good Earth ALMANAC

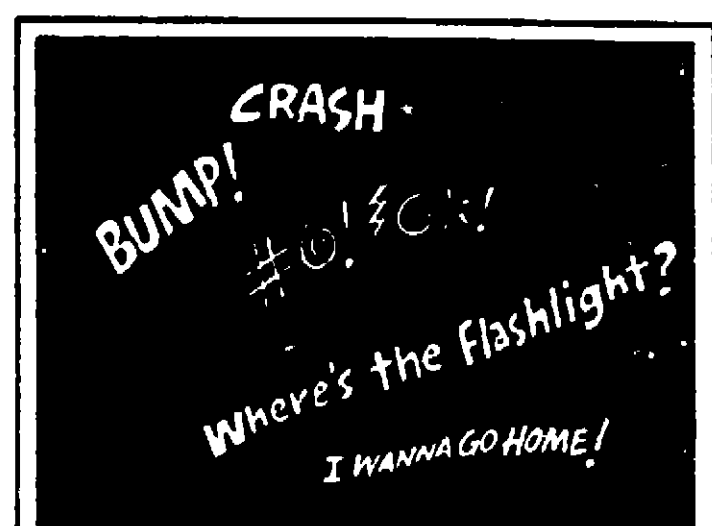

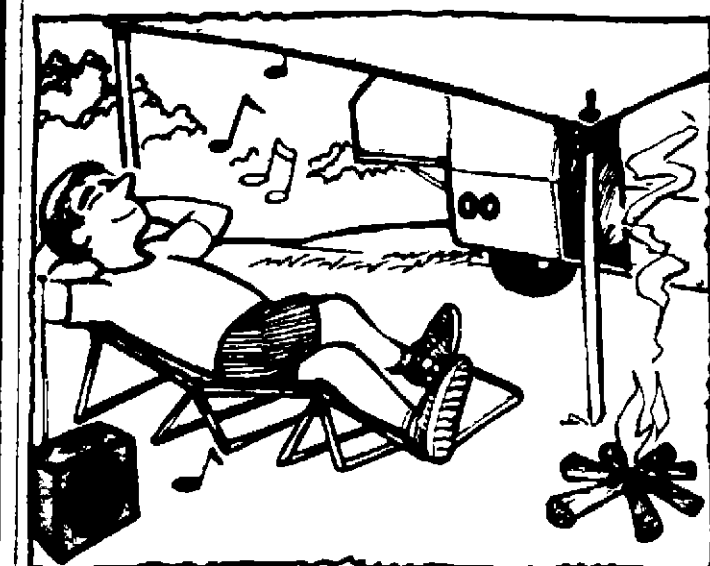

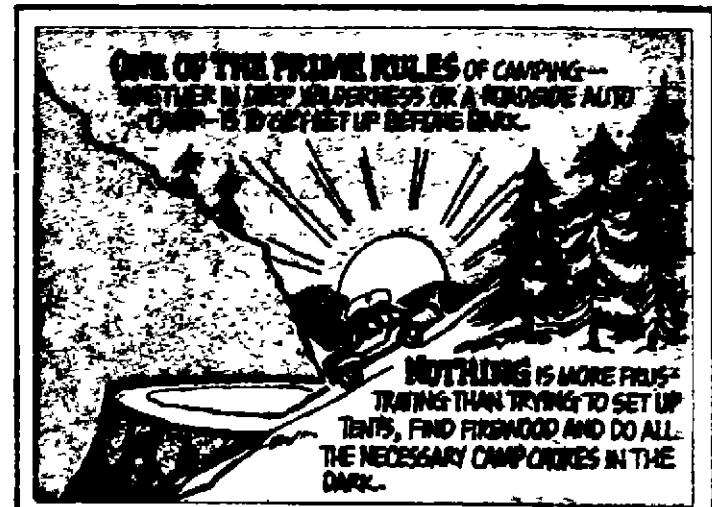

IT'S THAT TIME OF YEAR AGAIN, AND SOON COUNTLESS MILLIONS OF AMERICANS BOTH YOUNG AND OLD WILL BE HEADING TO THE WOODS, BEACHES, LAKES AND RIVERSIDES FOR DAYS OF CAMPING AND OUTDOOR RECREATION. THERE WAS A TIME WHEN THE ONLY RULE OF CAMPING WAS SURVIVAL AT ANY COST! TODAY IT'S DIFFERENT; IN ORDER FOR ALL OF US TO ENJOY SAFE, FUN CAMPING WE MUST "FOLLOW THE RULES."

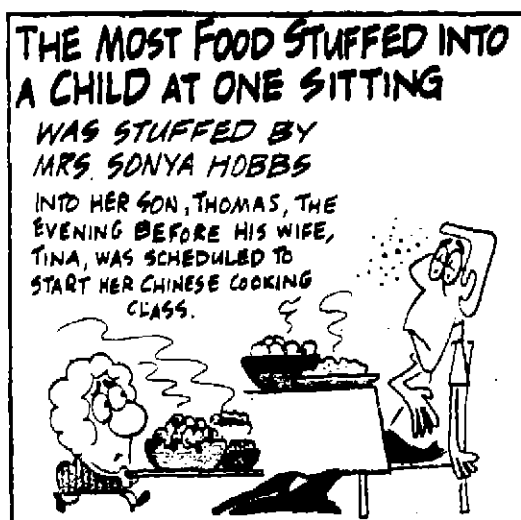

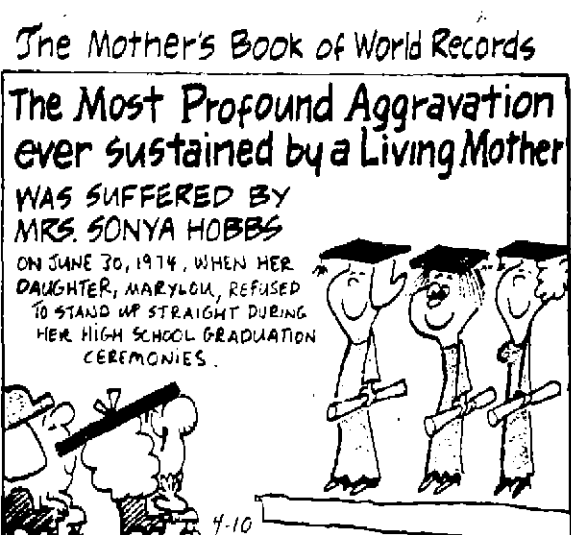

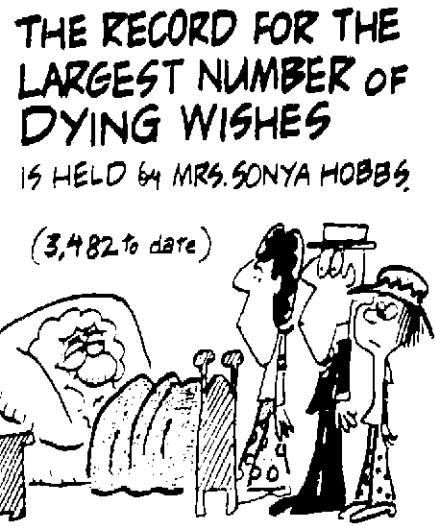

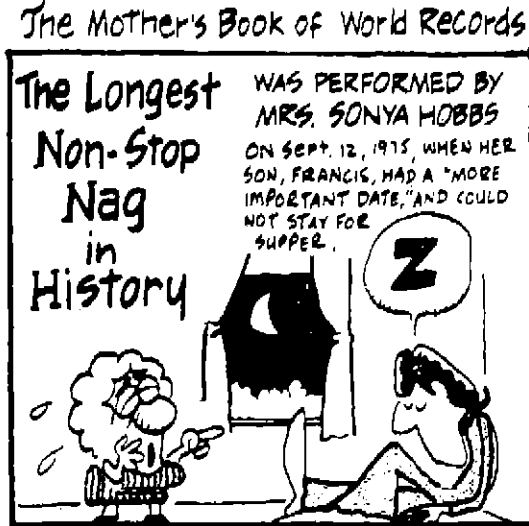

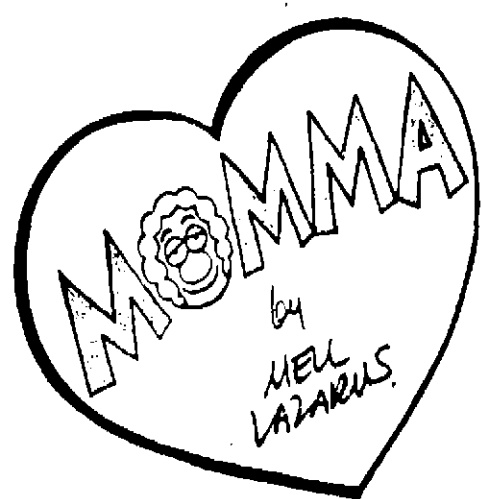

1. DO NOT DISTURB TREES, FLOWERS, ANIMALS OR ROCKS.
2. USE PUBLIC BATHROOM FACILITIES, OR IF IN A PRIMITIVE AREA GO TO THE BATHROOM AWAY FROM THE CAMP AND AWAY FROM WATER. SCOOP A HOLE AND COVER IT WITH DIRT AFTERWARD.
3. DON'T DISTURB OTHER CAMPERS WITH LOUD TALK, BLARING RADIOS, OR NUISANCE PETS.

4. MAKE SURE YOUR CAMPFIRE IS OUT BEFORE YOU LEAVE. KEEP POURING WATER ON IT UNTIL IT IS COOL TO THE TOUCH, THEN RAKE THE EMBERS APART AND DROWN IT AGAIN.

5. CARRY OUT ALL YOUR TRASH. SOUNDS SIMPLE, BUT EVEN A CIGARETTE PACK OR GUM WRAPPER LEFT BEHIND IS POLLUTION.

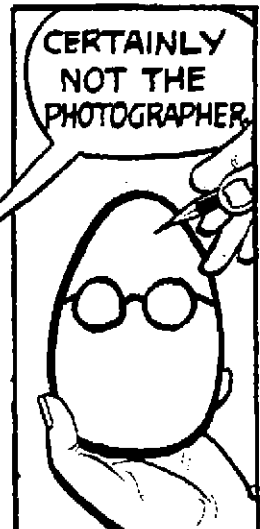

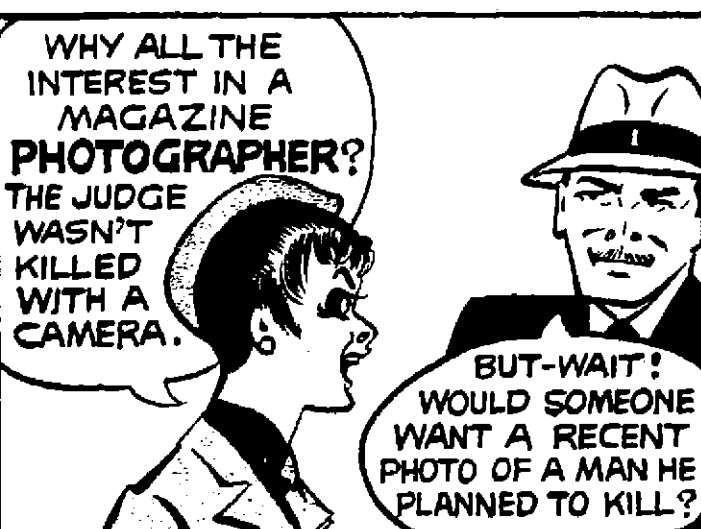

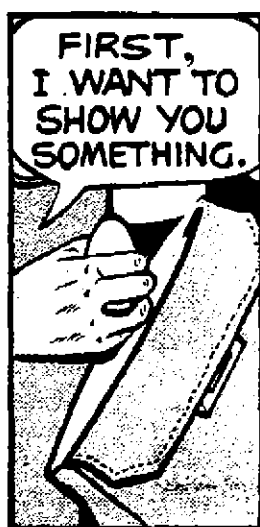

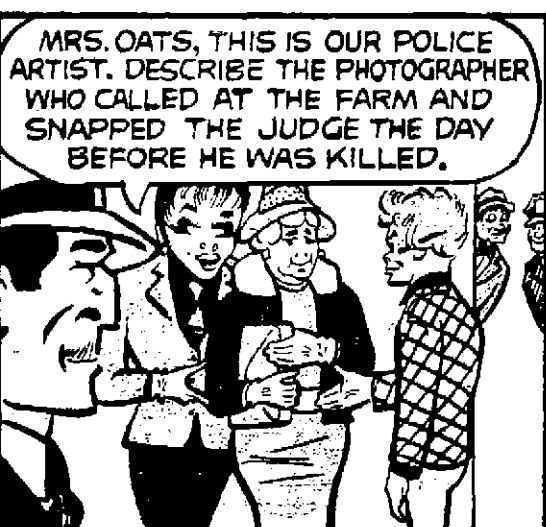

6. LEAVE YOUR CAMPSITE BETTER LOOKING THAN YOU FOUND IT. THIS LAST RULE IS ONE OF MY FAVORITES. I NOW HAVE ACCESS TO SEVERAL GOOD PRIVATE CAMPSITES BECAUSE WE TAKE ALONG GARBAGE BAGS AND CARRY OFF OTHER CAMPERS' DEBRIS.

HOW TO PLAY. First read the list of words then look at the puzzle. The words are in all directions—vertically, horizontally, diagonally, backwards. Circle each letter of a word found and strike it off list. The letters are often used more than once so do not cross them out. It is best to find the big words first. When you find all the words listed in the clues you'll have a number of letters over which spell the Wonderword
